ALL ABOARD!

SECTION A—BASIC SENTENCES

To the Group Leader: If you have been working only with the phonograph records, without any Guide, you will be on your own from now on. When the group goes through the Basic Sentences and the Listening In sections, choose someone with good pronunciation to do the reading. From now on all the group members will have to be particularly on the watch to detect and correct faulty pronunciation.

1. Basic Sentences

John Cook is telling Peter Smith about a railroad trip that he has taken in the company of Phroso and other Greek friends.

2. Hints on Spelling

Up to now you have not been asked to pay any particular attention to the conventional spelling. All you needed was something that would remind you as accurately as possible of the sounds you heard, and for that purpose the phonetic spelling was better. Beginning with this Unit, however, you should start learning the regular Greek spelling if you want to be able to read anything in Greek or even to look up a Greek word in a dictionary, because you will not find the phonetic spelling in use outside this book. But throughout this book we shall continue to give you the phonetic spelling because it will provide you with an indispensable check on the conventional spelling in the matter of the grouping of words in phrases, the accent, and the representation of various sounds, especially consonants for which the native alphabet lacks clear symbols.

The first time you go through the Basic Sentences in this and in each of the following Units, keep your eyes on the Aids to Listening. The second time through, try to follow the conventional spelling, unless it tends to throw you off on the pronunciation. By the third reading you should be able to watch only the conventional spelling, and still pronounce the words as you have up to this point. The most important thing for you to remember is that you already know how to pronounce Greek. Don't let the different appearance of familiar words change your pronunciation in the least. In any case don't be in too much of a hurry to learn the conventional spelling. Remember that your main job is learning how to speak Greek.

Greece has the longest literary tradition in all Europe. Writing and reading have gone on continuously from very early times. When words were first put down in writing in Greece, the spelling of each word was phonetic, that is, each spoken sound was represented by one letter. The alphabet you will find used in all Greek books is the one which was particularly fitted to the actual pronunciation of Greek at Athens about 2400 years ago, when one of the most noteworthy features of the language was a considerable number of vowels and combinations of vowels. Since that time there have been very great changes in pronunciation, while the spelling has remained practically static, so that you can easily understand why there is not a one-to-one correspondence between the sounds of the present spoken language and the letters of the alphabet. On the one hand certain vowels which were once pronounced — and spelled — differently, have developed into one vowel, but since people have continued to keep the ancient spelling of the words in which those vowel letters stand, there are now several ways of writing one and the same vowel sound. On the other hand the modern language has more consonant sounds than the ancient language, so that the consonant letters of the old alphabet are not numerous enough to represent clearly all the consonant sounds that must now be expressed. In this and some of the following Units we shall discuss the Greek conventional spelling in detail.

(a) ACCENTS AND BREATHINGS OVER VOWELS. There are three kinds of accent-marks used over vowels in Greek spelling: acute (´), grave (`), and circumflex (῀). In the ancient language they were indicators of high pitch, low pitch, and a combination of low and high, respectively. Nowadays all three of them are used, with no difference whatsoever, to indicate stress on a vowel. They are written over a vowel, or to the left side of it if the vowel is a capital letter.* The acute accent can stand on any one of the last three syllables of a word; the circumflex on either of the last two; the grave only on the last syllable (or on a word of one syllable), in which position the grave is a regular substitute for the acute when another word with an accent-mark (or the forms o or i of the definite article) follows in the same phrase. (The one exception to this last statement is that the acute is never changed to a grave on the word τί (tí) 'what?' and on γιατί (yatí) when it means 'what for?' 'why?'). Certain words are never stressed, despite the presence of an accent-mark on them; other words, which have a stress under certain circumstances, lose their stress under other circumstances, yet retain an accent-mark. Typical cases of this kind will be treated in the Hints on Spelling later on. But in the matter of stress the Aids to Listening will always be a much safer guide for you than the accents in the conventional spelling.

In addition to the accents there are two marks called breathings, which are found only over an initial vowel, written just to the left of the acute or the grave accent, or just underneath the circumflex accent.* Of these marks neither the rough breathing (῾), which showed that a word began with h in the ancient language, nor the smooth breathing (᾽), which showed the absence of h, means anything in the pronunciation of Modern Greek.

When Greek words are written entirely in capitals (as often on the cover of a book), neither accents nor breathings are written (e.g. ΕΛΛΑΔΑ for Ἑλλάδα elâdha).

(b) VOWELS.

The sound a is written α : na 'that' — is written να

or ᾳ : *ksipnái 'he wakes up' — " " ξυπνᾷ

*See the following section for the writing of these marks over combinations of two vowel letters that stand for one vowel sound.

Some speakers use this instead of ksipnâi (ξυπνάει), which you have learned.

The breathings come in the same position, e.g. εἶναι (íne) 'is', εἴκοσι (íkosi) 'twenty', οἱ (i) 'the (m.p. or f.p.)'.

SECTION B—WORD STUDY AND REVIEW OF BASIC SENTENCES

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

'I CAME BACK'.

(a) THE FORMS. You are familiar with the verb yirtzo 'I return; I come back' from Unit 10. Now look closely at the forms of it that are used in the following pair of sentences.

yirtzame-pánda píso-to-vrádhi. We always came back in the evening.
yirtsame-píso tin-giryakí. We came back Sunday.

Both these verb-forms refer to the past. The form yirtzame 'we (always) came back' is one of a set which you have known from Unit 4 on as the imperfective past. But yirtsame 'we came back' is a new representative of the past tense. We shall call it the perfective past.

Further forms of this new type, from verbs that you already know, méno, katalavéno, piyéno, occur in the sentences below.

mínam-ekí pémti paraskeví ke-saváto. We stayed there Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.
me-katalávate? Did you get me?
píghate-me-to-vapóri? Did you go by boat?

Here is the full set of forms for yirtzo:

		Endings:
I came back	yírisA	-a
you	yirtsATE	-ate
he	yírisE	-e
we	yirtsAME	-ame
they	yirtsANE	-ane

The endings should at once strike you as familiar: this is the very same set that you learned for the imperfective past (yíriza, yirtzate, etc.). And in this type, too, you find the accent going back as far as it can, two syllables from the final one. These two features, endings and recessive accent, stamp these verb-forms as past. But you see that their stem (yiris-) marks them as perfective. Once you know the perfective stem (e.g. dhyavas-, anaps-, plíros-, milis-, katalav-), it is easy to form the perfective past (dhyávasa, ánapsa, plírosa, mílisa, katálava, etc.).

For the perfective past, as for the imperfective past, whose formation you studied in Unit 4, the same rules hold for attaching é- to the beginning of any form that would otherwise not be long enough to receive the accent on the second from the last syllable (e.g. ékopsa, évala, émina).

But now look at the following examples:

	Perfective past	Perfective stem
I said	ípa	p-
I drank	ípya	py-
I saw	ídha	dh-

As you see, these verb-forms have not é- but í- at the beginning. And to these must be added írtha 'I came', whose perfective stem is erth-. They behave in exactly the same way as the imperfective past ékha 'I had' (from ékho).

Finally, there are two or three verbs which are a little peculiar in the formation of this type, like éfagha 'I ate' (stem fa-), pígha 'I went' (stem pa-), píra 'I took' (stem par-). And occasionally there are verbs which have a perfective past with the set of endings you are now studying (-a, -ate, etc.), like írtha 'I came', ékatsa 'I sat down', as if their imperfective presents were of the -o type, whereas they are actually of the -me type: érkhome 'I come' and káthome 'I sit'.

The following is a list of very common verbs with peculiar perfective pasts:

Imperfective present		Perfective stem	Perfective past
tróo	'I eat'	fa-	éfagha
piyéno	'I go'	pa-	pígha
pérno	'I take'	par-	píra
léo	'I say'	p-	ípa
píno	'I drink'	py-	ípya
vlépo	'I see'	dh-	ídha
érkhome	'I come'	erth-	írtha
káthome	'I sit; I sit down'	kats-	ékatsa

(b) THE MEANING. Now to find out the use of this type, the perfective past, study carefully the sentences given above, and the following ones:

ſíghame-tetárti-ap-tim-bátra.	We left Patras on a Wednesday.
pígha-me-to-tréno.	I went by train.
ti-ípate?	What did you say?

In these examples you see various actions that are presented not as acts in process or repeated or customary in the past, like éfevgha 'I was leaving; I used to leave; I always left', but simply as single acts completed in past time, such as ſíghame 'we left', pígha 'I went', ípate? 'did you say?' It is because these forms express the idea of action finished ("perfected") in past time that we call this type the perfective past.

Consider also the following example:

taksidhévame-s-ti-thesalía ke-piyéname-polí-ghlíghora, otan-éksafna stamátise-to-tréno.

We were riding along through Thessaly and making very good time, when all of a sudden the train stopped.

This sentence is particularly instructive because it shows how the imperfective past is the type used for an action that kept on for some time (taksidhévame 'we were riding along', piyéname 'we were going'), while the perfective past is used for a momentary occurrence (stamátise 'it stopped') in the midst of the action that was going on.

Of course the mere fact that a past action took quite a while does not make that action call for an imperfective past. Take this pair of sentences:

émina-dhyó-misi-mínes s-ena-ksenodhochío. I stayed at a hotel for two months and a half.
émena-s-ti-néa-yórki. I lived in New York.

In spite of the length of time involved, the stay at the hotel was a single act that had a definite termination, so the verb-form had to be perfective past (émina); but the living in New York was not spoken of in terms of any definite period, so the verb-form had to be imperfective past (émena). You see that in this case we use two different verbs in the same tense ('stayed' and 'lived') in English, whereas Greek uses two different types of action (émina and émena), but the same verb (méno).

Another difference between Greek and English in the matter of past tense is to be seen in the sentences that follow:

khásame-to-dhrómo. We've gotten off the road.
ksékhasa-páli-to-klidhí-mu. I've forgotten my key again.
ídhate-poté-ena-tétyo-spíti? Have you ever seen such a house?

In ordinary speech there is no special equivalent in Greek for our present perfect tense with 'have' ('we've gotten', 'I've forgotten', 'have you seen?') as opposed to our plain past tense ('we got', 'I forgot', 'did you see?'); Greek uses only the perfective past, which we may turn into English in either way.

There are certain verbs which denote lasting conditions or types of action that in the nature of things are the very opposite of momentary. To express past time such verbs in Greek are apt to possess only one set of forms, the imperfective past, like ímuna I 'was', íkha 'I had', íksera 'I knew', íthela 'I wanted'. On those relatively rare occasions when circumstances call for a perfective past, Greek speakers either resort to a different verb (as they do when they use státhika for '(this once) I was' or ématha for 'I found out'), or find it possible to use the imperfective past of the same verb with perfective meaning (as in the case of ékha 'I got', e.g. ékha-ghráma "I got a letter," or as in the case of thélа 'I wanted', since thélisa, the real perfective past, is almost never used).

arnyéme 'I DENY.' Up to this point you have learned two different types of -me verbs: ergházome 'I work', and kimáme 'I sleep'. In the present Unit there appear two more -me verbs, arnyéme 'I deny' and varyéme 'I am bored', illustrating the third (and last) type of imperfective present. These are the forms:

arnyéme	I deny
arnyéste	you deny arnyéte	he denies arnyómaste	we deny
arnyúnde	they deny

COMMENT 3

ADJECTIVES, INCLUDING dhikós 'OWN', WITH mu, sas, ETC.

(a) HOW TO SAY 'MY WHITE SHOES'. From Unit 4 on you have known how to express possession by putting the little words mu, sas, etc. after the noun in simple phrases like enas-fíloz-mu 'a friend of mine', o-fílo-sas 'your friend', or i-mitéra-tus 'their mother'. But by this time you have also heard quite a few examples of such phrases in which an adjective is present with the noun.

enas-áloz-mu-fílos ine-ipálilo-se-ghrafío.	Another friend of mine is an employee in an office.
i-zestí-sas-anéridhes férnune-vrochés.	Your hot winds bring rain.
o-yórghos? in-o-kaliterós-mu-fílos!	George? He's my best friend.
thélo o-énas na-mu-kathartsi-ta-áspra-mu-papútsya.	I want the one to clean my white shoes for me.
m-arési-to-mávro-tus-krasí.	I like their red wine.
edhó ine-ta-kaliterá-mas-kafenía.	Here are our best coffee-shops.
efétos tha-párune-óla-tus-ta-pedhyá-mazí-tus.	This year they're going to take all their children with them.

When the phrase contains an adjective that precedes the noun, the words mu, sas, etc. almost always follow the adjective directly, as in ta-áspra-mu-papútsya 'my white shoes'.

(b) How to say 'mine' and 'my own'. Look carefully at the way possession is expressed in the following sentences:

pârte-to, ine-dhikó-sas. Take it, it's yours.

ine-dhikó-sas-to-pedhí? Does the child belong to you? ('Is the child yours?') ine-dhikí-mas-páli-i-eládha. Greece is ours once more.

One of the limitations upon the use of the possessive words mu, sas, etc. is that none of them can stand alone in a sentence right after ine 'is; (they) are' (or similar verbs). Therefore, in order to express an idea like 'it's yours' we have to put the adjective dhikós between ine and sas. The adjective dhikós has the same endings as kalós. Our English equivalent here is 'mine', 'yours', 'his', etc.

Now examine this next group of sentences:

ta-dhiká-mu-papútsya ine-pyó-kenúrya-ap-ta-dhiká-sas. My shoes are newer than yours.

dhén-thelе-na-sidherósi mítе-ti-dhikí-sas-foresyá mítе-ti-dhikí-mu. She didn't want to iron either your suit or mine.

otan-érchete-spíti-mas-i-thyá-i-maría férni-ta-dhiká-tis-ta-machérya ta-dhiká-tis-ta-pirúnya ke-ta-dhiká-tis-ta-potírya. When Aunt Mary comes to our house, she brings [along] her own knives, (her own) forks, and (her own) glasses.

Another limitation upon the use of the possessive words mu, sas, etc. is that, unlike our possessives 'my', 'your', etc., they cannot be stressed under any circumstances. The examples just cited show that this limitation, too, is met by a combination, this time of the definite article plus dhikós, which serves whenever the Greeks want to be emphatic or specific about the person to whom something or someone belongs. This may occur especially frequently in a contrast, as in the first two sentences. The word-order is: article ('the'), dhikós, mu (sas, etc.), noun, as in ta-dhiká-mu-papútsya 'my shoes'. But the article may be repeated just before the noun, as in the example ta-dhiká-tis-ta-machérya 'her own knives'.

Finally, look at this pair of statements:

aftó-to-vivlío ine-dhikó-mu. This book is mine.

aftó-to-vivlío ine-to-dhikó-mu. This book is my own (and nobody else's).

The former of these sentences need not be any more than a mild statement of possession; the latter sentence is a much stronger statement because the definite article stands before dhikó-mu.

COMMENT 4

THE DAYS OF THE WEEK. In the following sentences from this Unit you find the names of some of the days and the way they are handled in a sentence.

fíghame-tetárti-ap-tim-bátra,	We left Patras on a Wednesday;
ftásame-s-ti-saloníki tim-bémti-to-proí,	we got to Salonica Thursday morning;
mínam-ekí pémti paraskeví ke-saváto,	we stayed there Thursday, Friday, and Saturday;
ke-yirísame-píso tin-giryakí.	and we came back Sunday.

You remember that in Unit 11 you learned that in general the object case is the one used for expressions of time, like tí-ora-ksipnáte? "What time do you wake up?" or borí-na-míno polín-geró "I may stay for a long time". Now you see that in the same way the names of the days stand in the object case when you are telling on what day a thing happened or will happen. Usually, though by no means always, the definite article is used before the word for the day, as in tim-bémti '(on) Thursday', tin-giryakí '(on) Sunday'. It is not easy to say why the article is sometimes omitted, though in the first sentence above tetárti (without tin) seems to have something of the indefiniteness of the English 'on a Wednesday'.

Here is the full list of the days of the week:

i-kiryakí	Sunday
i-dheftéra	Monday
i-tríti	Tuesday
i-tetárti	Wednesday
i-pémti	Thursday
i-paraskeví	Friday
to-saváto	Saturday

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You go into a railroad station: Where is the ticket window? You buy a ticket to Patras: What time does the train leave? Where can you get something to eat? Where can you buy some fruit to take with you and a book to read on the train?
2. Has anybody seen a porter? You find one and ask him to take your baggage; you tell him what train, what time; he asks how many pieces, and what class you will be going; he says he can see from your bags that you've done a lot of traveling; you ask him how much, and pay him; he comments unfavorably on the amount of the payment; you tell him that what you gave him was plenty.
3. A Greek tells you about trains in Greece: the railroad cars in Greece are not like yours in America; three classes; many go second class; poor people and those who are not going far take third class; very few passengers go first class; the third class cars have benches for five travelers; no drinking water on the train; you don't travel either so fast or so well but you don't pay so much.

4. You tell someone about a railroad trip you took: where you went, when you left, whether the train had a sleeper and a diner, whether you had to change trains, when you got there, whether the train was delayed, what you saw there, how long you stayed, what day you came back.

2. Hints on Spelling

CONSONANTS. In representing the consonants the Greek spelling system utilizes the letters of the alphabet according to several different principles. A consonant sound may be written with one letter (though not always with the same one — compare the z-sound as written in English 'breeze' and in 'please'), or it may be written with a combination of letters (like the ph we sometimes use for the f-sound, as in '*ph*one', etc.).

(a) Here are the consonant sounds (except y, which we shall treat in the last section) that may be written with a single letter:

Consonant Sound	Conventional Spelling		Examples
p	π	páli	written	πάλι
t	τ	tóte	"	τότε
k	κ	kóri	"	κόρη
th	θ	tha	"	θὰ
dh	δ	dhén	"	δὲν
kh	χ	khárika	"	χάρηκα
ch	χ	chéro]	"	χαίρω
gh	γ	ghála	"	γάλα
s	σ except at the end of words	stamátise	"	σταμάτησε
	ς at the end of words	ólos	"	ὅλος
z	ζ	zoí	"	ζωή
	σ before β, μπ, γ, μ	kózmos	"	κόσμος
f	φ	fílos	"	φίλος
	υ* after α, ε, before π, τ, κ, φ, θ, χ, σ, ψ, ξ	aftós	"	αὐτός
		efkharistó	"	εὐχαριστῶ
v	β	kóvo	"	κόβω
	υ* after α, ε, η, before β, δ, γ, ζ, μ, ν, λ, ρ, and vowel letters	ávrio	"	αὔριο
		dhulévo	"	δουλεύω
		*tvra	"	ἤβρα
m	μ	akóma	"	ἀκόμα

*Observe how the accents and breathings are written above the υ, since αυ, ευ, ηυ are treated as combinations of two vowel letters (like αι and ει), although here the υ stands for the consonant sound v.

Used for 'I found' by some Greek speakers instead of vríka (βρῆκα), which you have learned.

Consonant Sound	Conventional Spelling
n	ν
r	ρ

You may find almost any one of these consonant letters written double, but such writing (like that of dd, rr, vv in English 'wedding', 'borrow', 'flivver') still indicates only a single consonant sound (except for γγ, as explained in the next section): φύλλο 'leaf' is pronounced fílo, just like φίλο (sing., obj.) 'friend'.

Consonant Sound	Conventional Spelling
b	μπ
d	ντ
g	γκ γγ

(b) The following are consonant sounds which must be written with a combination of two letters:

	Examples
móno	written μόνο
lipáme	" λυποῦμαι
méra	" μέρα
boró	written μπορῶ
kabína	" καμπίνα
dulápa	" ντουλάπα
áide 'come on!'	" ἄιντε
gremós 'cliff'	" γκρεμός
góni 'grandchild'	" γγόνι
yeoryí	written γεωργοί
palyós	" παλιός
voíthya	" βοήθεια
pyós	" ποιός
folyá 'nest'	" φωλιά*

(c) These are the various ways of writing the sound y:

γ before αι, ε, ι, ει, οι, η, ῃ, υ ι after a consonant ει " " " οι " " "
η " " "

*Now usually spelled φωλιά.

The perfective past of -me verbs. From Unit 3 on you have been meeting -me verbs like ergházome 'I work' in the imperfective present. Now consider the verb-forms in the following examples, all of which have occurred in the Basic Sentences:

khárika-polí.	Glad to have met you. ('I was very glad.') ap-tin-iméra-pu-pandréftika	from the day that I got married voíthya ke-pnίyika!	Help, I'm drowning ('I have drowned')!
óti-sikóthika.	I just got up.
o-spíros dhé-skéftike-polí.	Spyros didn't care much what he did ('did not consider much').
tí-sas-fánike?	What do you think you're doing? ('What came into your mind?')
aftí státhike-lighάki-pyó-takhtikí.	She was a little more orderly (this time).
dhé-khriastíkame mítte-taksí mítte-khamáli.	We didn't need either a taxi or a porter.

The verbs in these examples all refer to the past, and if you think over the circumstances in which the actions took place, you will see that these are all single completed acts. What you have here, then, must be and are verb-forms of the perfective past, the tense whose use you studied in Unit 13, except that these are not from -o verbs, like yirtso 'I come back', but from -me verbs, like ergházome 'I work'. Let's see the full set of forms:

		Endings:
I worked	erghástIKA	-ika
you	erghastÍKATE	-ikate
he	erghástIKE	-ike
we	erghastÍKAME	-ikame
they	erghastÍKANE	-ikane

Like ytrisa 'I came back', the verb-form erghástika 'I worked' (or any other example of a perfective past of the -me verbs) is composed of a perfective stem plus a set of past-tense endings, with a recessive accent (i.e. a stress on the second from the last syllable). To speak first of the endings, you can see that the last part of them are identical with those of ytrisa (with -a, -ate, etc.), but that the full endings differ from those of ytrisa in that they are longer by the presence of a preceding element -ik-. The second feature to observe is that the perfective stem, to which the endings -ika, -ikate, etc. are attached, differs from the imperfective stem, to which the endings -ome, -este, etc. are added: thus erghast- contrasts with erghaz-. This situation is not really new to you, since you are by now thoroughly familiar with a corresponding difference of stem for the -o verbs and you know well how important in the verb system is the difference in meaning that goes hand in hand with this contrast of stems.

The next thing for you to do is to learn how to form the perfective stem of a -me verb from the imperfective stem. First let's look at some verbs which go according to a few patterns that are very common (even though you have not yet had many -me verbs as examples of them).

1. Imperfective present		Perfective past	Perfective stem
erghÁZome	'I work'	erghÁSTika	erghast-
khriÁZome	'I need'	khriÁSTika	khriast-

SUMMARY: Where the imperfective stem ends in -z, the perfective stem ends in -st.

2. Imperfective present		Perfective past	Perfective stem
pandréVome	'I get married; I marry'	pandréFTika	pandreft-

SUMMARY: Where the imperfective stem ends in -v, the perfective stem ends in -ft.

3. Imperfective present		Perfective past	Perfective stem
sikÓNome	'I get up'	sikÓTHika	sikoth-

SUMMARY: Where the imperfective stem ends in -on, the perfective stem ends in -oth.

4. Imperfective present		Perfective past	Perfective stem
arnYÊME	'I deny'	arnÍTHika	arnith- lipÚME	'I am sorry'	lipÍTHika	lipith- kimÚME	'I sleep'	kimÍTHika	kimith-
fovÚME	'I fear'	fovÍTHika	fovith-

SUMMARY: Where the imperfective present is accented on the ending rather than on the stem (that is, where the I-form ends in accented -yéme or -úme), -ith has to be added to the imperfective stem to form the perfective stem.

If you compare these four types of -me verbs to the four types of -o verbs whose stem formation you studied in Unit 8, you will see that there is a complete parallelism: in Types 1, 2, and 3 the imperfective stems end in -z, -v, and -on, respectively, and in Type 4 the stem is unaccented in the imperfective present. All four types are very common, being represented by a considerable number of verbs. You can safely assume that most new verbs that you meet in -zome, -vome, -ónome, -yéme, and -úme will form their perfective pasts according to the patterns above.

But on the other hand there are a good many -me verbs that do not have many other verbs like them, or at least have so few that it is perhaps more worthwhile to learn their parts by heart than to try to learn the many patterns which they follow, each of which may comprise only a handful of verbs. The following is a complete list of the verbs you have had so far that do not fit into any of the four patterns (1. -z: -st, 2. -v: -ft, 3. -on: -oth, 4. unaccented stem: addition of -ith) that you have just studied.

skéftome	'I consider'	skéflika	skeft-

Imperfective present		Perfective past	Perfective stem
fénete	'it seems'	fánike	fan-
stékome	'I stand'	státhika	stath- chérome	'I am glad'	khárika	khar- pníghome	'I get drowned; I drown'	pnígika	pnigh- varyéme	'I am bored'	varéthika	vareth-

In this Word Study you have now met the two stems you need to know for all verbs of the -me type that have occurred up to this point in the Units. Starting with this Unit, as has been done for the -o verbs, so now for any new -me verb that occurs the Finder Lists will give the first person singular of the imperfective present and the stem of the perfective, which will be put between obliques, as follows: ergházome /erghast/, fovúme /fovith/, fénete /fan/.

Two -me verbs have occurred, káthome 'I sit (down)' and érkhome 'I come', which form their perfective pasts, ékatsa (stem kats-) and írtha (stem erth-), respectively, like -o verbs. Conversely, two -o verbs have occurred, vrísko 'I find' and anevéno 'I go up', which form their perfective pasts, vríka (stem vr-) and anévika (stem anev-), respectively, like -me verbs.

COMMENT 2

PREPOSITIONS. If you compare the Greek expressions apo 'from' and káto-apo 'under', you will see that Greek has two kinds of prepositions, simple ones like apo and compound ones like káto-apo.

(a) SIMPLE PREPOSITIONS. The number of simple prepositions in Greek is very small in comparison with the number that we have in English. Consequently, one Greek preposition may well have two or more English equivalents (as se can mean 'to', 'at', 'on', or 'in'). But in any case you cannot predict which Greek preposition will be used in a given situation. For example, you may come to equate our word 'to' with se, because you have heard many phrases in which se corresponds to our 'to'. But 'married to' happens to be pandreménos me, and 'tickets to' is isitíria ya. Such examples show how important it is to listen to the phrases in which each Greek preposition occurs and to imitate the way you have heard them said.

Following are some examples from the Units to illustrate the more frequent prepositions and to bring out the meanings of them that you have encountered so far. As you learned in Unit 3, Greek prepositions are followed by the object case.

san-gy (used before a pronoun beginning with the vowel a) like	You speak Greek like my brother.	milít-eliniká san-don-adherfó-mu.

	You speak Greek like me.	milít-eliniká san-g-eména.

(b) COMPOUND PREPOSITIONS. Of the simple prepositions four (se, apo, me, and ya) may be combined with various adverbs (like ékso 'outside', makriá 'far', páno 'up') to form compound prepositions. This is a process you are familiar with from English. Thus ékso-apo is exactly equivalent to our 'out of; outside of', and makriá-apo to our 'far from'. Here are some examples from this and preceding Units.

Compounds with se

kondá-se	kondá-s-tim-bátra	near Patras
	kondá-s-ti-thálasa	near the sea
andíkri-se	andíkri-s-ton-ginimatóghrafo	across from the movie theater brostá-se	s-to-kyóski brostá-s-to-kurío pulúne.	They sell [them] at the news-stand in front of the barber shop.
	brostá-se-mya-mikrí-eklisyá	in front of a little church
mésa-se (mé-se)	tóra? mésa-s-ti-zésti?	Now? In this heat?
	mé-s-to-spíti	in the house
anámesa-se	anámesa-s-tiz-ghramés tu-sidherodhrómu	in the middle of the (railroad) track
páno-se	áfise-óla-tis-ta-prámata páno-s-enam-págo.	She left all her things on a bench.
	chyónize páno-s-ta-vunú.	It snowed up in the mountains.
	elát-e-n-anevúme páno-s-to-kástro.	Come on, let's go up to the fortress.

káto-se	páne-perípato káto-s-tim-brokiméa.	They go for a walk down at the wharf.
	káto-s-to-yaló	down at the beach
	káto-s-to-limáni ine-polí-lústri.	Down by the harbor there are a lot of bootblacks.
	ksérete pos-piyénune káto-s-to-limáni?	You know how you go down to the harbor?

Compounds with apo

makriá-apo	dhén-ine-makriá-apo-dhó.	It isn't far from here.
éks(o)-apo	ékso-ap-to-spíti	outside the house
pís(o)-apo	érikse-to-banyeró-tu pís-ap-tin-dulápa-tu.	He threw his bathing suit in back of his wardrobe.
pán(o)-apo	s-to-ráfi pán-ap-to-pyáno	on the shelf over the piano

Notice the difference between páno-apo 'above; over' and páno-se 'on'.

kát(o)-apo	káto-ap-to-kreváti-tu	underneath his bed

Notice the difference between káto-apo 'under' and káto-se 'down at; down to'.

prín-apo	prín-ap-tom-bólemo	before the war íster(a)-apo	íster-apo-tétyo-faí	after a meal like that íster-apo-myá-misi-óra	an hour and a half later ('after an hour and a half')

Compounds with me

mazí-me	páme-mazí-me-tom-bétro.	Let's go along with Peter.
	mazí-m-emás	along with us
ísa-me	ísa-me-tim-blatía	as far as the square
	apo-dhó ísa-me-ti-saloníki	from here all the way to Salonica
	borí-na-pári-kanenas ena-taksí-isa-m-ekí.	You can take a taxi up to there.
	ekhune-dhío-patómata ke-kápote-ísa-me-pénde.	They have two floors and sometimes up to five.

Compound with ya

andíz-ya	andíz-ya-vrochí-ekhum-tlyo-ke-zésti.	It's warm and sunny out, for a change. ('Instead of rain we have sun and warmth.')

(c) PRONOUNS AFTER PREPOSITIONS AND AFTER ADVERBS. Look at the following phrases containing personal pronouns:

to-thélo ya-ména-móno.	I only want it for myself.
elíte-s-eména.	Come to me.
milíi-elinikí san-g-eména.	You speak Greek like me.
mazí-m-emás	along with us

From these examples you see that any personal pronoun that follows a preposition, either simple or compound, must always be a stressed pronoun (standing, of course, in the object case).

Now observe this set of phrases in which personal pronouns occur:

írthe-k-ékatse-brostá-mas.	She came and sat down in front of us.
itane-kondá-tu t-aftokínito?	Was the car near him?
ptso-mu stekótan-i-maría.	Mary was standing behind me.
elíte-mazí-mu.	Come with me.
tín-ékhasa-poté-mu tin-ipomoní-mu?	Have I ever lost my patience?

These examples show that in connection with an unstressed pronoun Greek uses only the first element of the compound prepositions, that is, the adverb, to which the little words mú, sas, tu, tis, mas, tus are attached directly. Thus we say pís-ap-tom-bétro 'behind Peter', but ptso-tu 'behind him'. Now if you consider the pair of phrases pís-apo-ména 'behind me' and ptso-mu 'behind me', you will find that the first is emphatic and the second is not. Here are a few more examples by way of contrast:

Compound preposition used with noun or stressed pronoun	Adverb used with unstressed pronoun
brostá-s-to-yatró	brostá-tu
in front of the doctor	in front of him kondá-s-ti-maría	kondá-tis
near Mary	near her

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. A Greek friend invites you to go bathing; you remark that you have no bathing suit. Where can I buy one?
2. Conversation with a clerk about that bathing suit.
3. You speak to the owner of the bathing establishment: I'd like a dressing room. Where is it? What number? Where is the key to my room? I have no towel.
4. You try to teach a girl how to swim: you mustn't be afraid; I'll hold you; don't pull me by the hair.
5. You sit on the beach and talk about the bathers with a Greek: a few pretty girls, others not so pretty; some men swim well, others not so well; some girls are afraid of the water.
6. You want to spend Sunday at the beach near Athens: How far is it? How could I get there? Bus or train? How many stops? Have I to change busses? Are there many people on the busses on Sunday? Is the water deep? Is it cool in the evening?
7. You tell how you went swimming at a small seaside town in Greece: all the women left; only two or three girls stayed; the children were very curious; no bathing suits for children; you had a talk with a pretty girl, but she didn't understand your Greek well; all the people were standing at the windows and wouldn't go away.

Continue conversation. Additional check-up on the material of the Basic Sentences by the Leader if it seems necessary.
Review: Complete check-up on the material of the Word Study and Basic Sentences.

2. Hints on Spelling

1. Consonants (concl.).

(a) Consonant combinations spelled with one letter. From our own English spelling, in which the cluster 'ks (as in 'oa*ks*', '*ec*stasy') may be written x, as in '*ex*tra', you are familiar with the way two consonants may be spelled with one letter.

The group ks is written ξ: ékso 'out' is written ἔξω
The group ps " " ψ: psomí 'bread' " " ψωμί

(b) Consonant combinations spelled with two letters. Certain consonant combinations are represented in Greek conventional spelling by unforeseeable combinations of letters. Among the following examples notice especially the groups of letters μπ, ντ, and γκ (or γγ), which in the Hints on Spelling in Unit 14 you found could be used for the consonants b, d, and g, respectively.

The group	mb	is written	μπ:	kolímbi 'a swim'	is written	κολύμπι

2. CONSONANTS IN COMBINATIONS OF WORDS. In representing the consonant combinations that arise when two words run together (see the Hints on Pronunciation in Units 2, 3, and 7), Greek conventional spelling employs some of the same groups of consonant letters that are used within a word (see Part 1, Section (b) of the Hints on Spelling in this Unit), plus some new combinations of letters to write consonant clusters that are rare or are not found within a word. In this connection the main principle of the conventional spelling system is that a given word should always keep its initial consonant letter or combination of consonant letters, even after a word with final -n has come to stand before it in a closely knit phrase. As for the changes that happen to final -s and -n in these combinations, they are very inadequately represented. The following examples will show all the types of combinations that come up:

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

The imperfective past of certain -o verbs and of -me verbs.

(a) ákua 'I was hearing', élegha 'I was saying', and étrogha 'I was eating'. For some time now you have known the verbs léo, tróo, and akúo, whose imperfective stems, aku-, le-, and tro-, end in a vowel. Two of these verbs occur in the imperfective past in the following sentence from this Unit:

dhên-ákua-ti-élegha. I couldn't hear myself think. ('I was not hearing what I was saying.')

From this example you can see that in the imperfective past the verbs akúo and léo behave differently from each other. The verbs léo and tróo (and a few others), whose stems end in a vowel in the imperfective present, add gh to the end of the stem in the imperfective past; this gh, of course, changes to y before e. Here is the full set of forms for the three verbs mentioned, as you will hear them most frequently:

ákua	élegha	étrogha
akúate	léghate	tróghate
ákue	éleye	étroye
akúame	léghame	tróghame
akúane	léghane	tróghane

The verb páo 'I go', whose stem pa- likewise ends in a vowel, is not used in the imperfective past. Instead you will always find ptyena, the imperfective past of piyéno. Incidentally, the imperfective presents páo and piyéno are used practically interchangeably.

(b) ksipnúsa 'I was waking up' and milúsa 'I was speaking'. Look at the verb-forms in the following sentences from this Unit.

o-odhighós patúse-tin-dachtlita óli-tin-óra. The driver kept his foot on the accelerator the whole time.

o-soférr dhêm-borúse-na-strípsi-éfkola. The chauffeur couldn't make turns ('was not able to turn') easily.

Digitized by Google
Original from THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

Both patâse 'he was stepping on' and borâse 'he was (always) able' are in the imperfective past. The imperfective presents of these verbs, in the I-form, are pató 'I step; I step on', and boró 'I am able; I can', respectively. Now pató goes like ksipnó 'I wake up' and boró goes like milô 'I speak', the verbs that you have had as models before. The following is a complete set of forms for ksipnó and milô:

		Endings:
ksipnÚSA	milÚSA	-âsa
ksipnÚSATE	milÚSATE	-âsate
ksipnÚSE	milÚSE	-âse
ksipnÚSAME	milÚSAME	-âsame
ksipnÚSANE	milÚSANE	-âsane

As you see, the endings in this tense are just the same, whether a verb is like ksipnó, with the third person singular in -âi, or like milô, with the third person singular in -î. Thus, if any verb ends in accented -ó in the imperfective present, it has the endings -âsa, -âsate, etc. in the imperfective past. Notice that in the first and third singular the accent is unusual in that it does not go back two syllables from the end as it does in all other past tense forms, but remains on the -u- throughout: thus ksipnâsa is in contrast with kstpnisa 'I woke up', the perfective past. In consequence of this peculiar position of the accent on -âsa and -âse, there is never any need of prefixing the syllable é- to any imperfective pasts of this type (even to short ones like zâsa 'I was living').

(c) kornâriza 'I WAS BLOWING THE HORN'. Among the Basic Sentences of this Unit there occurred the following:

o-soʃér kornârize-âghria. The chauffeur would toot like mad ('was blowing the horn wildly').

The imperfective present of this verb, in the first person singular, is kornâro. These are the forms of the imperfective past:

	Endings:		Endings:
kornârIZA	-iza	kornarÍZAME	-izame
kornarÍZATE	-izate	kornarÍZANE	-izane
kornârIZE	-ize

Verbs in -áro (whose perfective pasts are in -árisa) all form their imperfective pasts in this way.

(d) erghazómuna 'I WAS WORKING' AND kimómuna 'I WAS SLEEPING'. Consider the verb-forms in these examples:

ena-mulári stekótane-anámesa-s-tiz-ghramés. A mule was standing [right] in the middle of the track.
ota-yírisa-spíti, o-pétros kimótan-akóma. When I came home, Peter was still asleep.

Both stekótane and kimótane are in the imperfective past. You have already learned the imperfective presents of these verbs as stékome 'I stand' and kimúme 'I sleep'. Now here are the forms of the imperfective past for these two types, with our model verb ergházome 'I work' used instead of stékome.

		Endings:
erghazÓMUNA	kimÓMUNA	-ómuna
erghazÓSASTE	kimÓSASTE	-ósaste
erghazÓTANE	kimÓTANE	-ótane
erghazÓMASTE	kimÓMASTE	-ómaste
erghazÓNDANE	kimÓNDANE	-óndane

As you see, the endings of these two types of -me verbs are identical in this tense, whether a verb is like ergházome, with the accent on the stem, or like kimúme, with the accent on the ending -úme. Unlike all other past tenses of the Greek verb, the imperfective past of the -me verbs does not end in the familiar -a, -ate, etc., but in a totally different set of endings. Only in ímuna 'I was', ísaste 'you were', etc. have you met anything similar. But in erghazómuna, erghazósaste, etc. there is a characteristic -o- with which all the endings begin, while in the verb 'to be' the endings are -muna, -saste, etc. And erghazótane 'he was working' is distinct from erghazóndane 'they were working', whereas ítane serves as either a he- or a *they-*form.

(e) arnyómuna 'I USED TO DENY'. The Basic Sentences of the present Unit included the following:

i-khorikt varyóndane-na-kunilhúne. The people in the village couldn't be bothered getting out of the way.

Generated through HathiTrust on 2025-08-01 03:33 GMT

The form varyóndane, from the verb varyéme, is in the imperfective past. To illustrate the forms of the imperfective past of a -me verb like varyéme, let's use the model verb arnyéme 'I deny'.

	Endings:
arnYÓMUNA	-yómuna
arnYÓSASTE	-yósaste
arnYÓTANE	-yótane
arnYÓMASTE	-yómaste
arnYÓNDANE	-yóndane

You see that the only difference between the imperfective past endings of the -yéme verbs and those of the other -me verbs consists of the y sound before -ómuna, -ósaste, etc.

COMMENT 2

ARTICLES. In general you will find a form of o, i, to used where we use 'the', and a form of enas, mya, ena where we use 'a'. But there are some cases in Greek, which are presented in the following sections, that may seem rather striking to a speaker of English.

(a) THE DEFINITE ARTICLE. Here are a few characteristic examples of the way the definite article is used in Greek.

(1) étsi-émaste-emís-i-romyí.	That's how we Greeks are.
se-tútin-din-davérna	at this tavern
ekínos-eki-o-ktrios	that man there aftós-o-platís-dhrómos	this broad avenue

When any one of the stressed pronouns, or the words for 'this' and 'that', are combined with a noun, Greek uses the definite article before the noun.

(2) ékhum-ap-ólа-ta-khrómata.	We have [them] in all colors.
dhén-ekho-álo-kalítero s-ólo-to-ksenodhochío.	I haven't another better in the whole hotel.
ólos-o-kózmos trói-súpa.	Everyone ('All the world') is eating soup.
áfise-ólа-tis-ta-prámata páno-s-enam-bángo.	She left all her things on a bench.

The definite article is generally used after the adjective ólos 'all; whole'.

(3) pétro	Peter!	kírie-adhamandíu	Mr. Adamantiou!
o-pétros	Peter	o-kírios-adhamandíu	Mr. Adamantiou
i-fróso	Phroso	o-yatrós-o-kladhás	Dr. Kladas eghó ky-o-burbúlis	Bourboulis and I	tone-léne-pétro.	His name is Peter. ('They call him Peter.') in-o-yórghos-o-khristofóru.	It's George Christophorou.

When a person is spoken of (not spoken to), his name, both first and last, (except after o-kírios, i-kiría, or i-dhespinís) takes the definite article, and so does his title, if any. This does not happen, however, after the verb léo 'I call' (in telling what someone's name is).

(4) s-tin-athína	in Athens	íst-ap-tim-bátra í-apo-álo-méros-tis-eládhas?	Are you from Patras or from another part of Greece?
to-sikágho	Chicago	o-plati-yalós	Broad Beach
s-tin-amerikí	in America

The definite article is used before all names of places.

(5) s-ti-mía	at one o'clock	fíasame-s-ti-saloníki tim-bémti-to-prot.	We got to Salonica Thursday morning.
s-tis-enyá	at nine	to-chimóna	in (the) winter
ti-nikhía	at night	to-kalokéri	in (the) summer to-vrádhi	in the evening
yirísame-píso tin-giryakí.	We came back Sunday.

The definite article is almost always used with nouns (or numerals) in phrases that answer the question 'when?' (adverbial phrases of time).

(6) aftá-echi-i-zoí.	Such is life. ('These things the life has.')
o-pólemos dhén-in-astío.	War is no joke.
to-chyóni ine-pánda-krío.	Snow is always cold.
o-ipálilos ergházete-se-ghrafío.	A clerk works in an office, or Clerks work in offices.
i-dulápa k-i-karékles in-épipla.	Wardrobes and chairs are furniture.
to-éna ke-to-dhío in-arithmí.	One and two are numbers.
i-amerikaní milún-angliká.	Americans speak English.
i-áskimes-yinékes dhén-ekhune-pánda-áskima-pedhyá.	Ugly women don't always have ugly children.

You will find practically no sentence in Greek where the subject is without an article. Notice how in the above examples English uses either the indefinite article or no article at all. But in Greek the indefinite article is reserved for subjects that are simply unidentified (as in tone-vlépi-ena-korítsi "A girl sees him.") or only vaguely identified (as in dhén-ine-k-enaz-níkos-aravandinó-s-to-vapóri-sas? "Isn't there also a Nick Aravantinos on your ship?").

(7) ya-to-dhéka pérno-ekató-dhrakhmés tin-iméra.	For Number 10 I get a hundred drachmas a day.
póso-kostízune?—dhyakósyez-dhrakhmés-to-pukámiso.	How much do they cost?—Two hundred drachmas each ('the shirt').
dhóste-más-ta ya-ekatón-oghdhónda-dhrakhmés-to-éna.	Give them to us for a hundred and eighty drachmas apiece ('the one').

The definite article is used in a distributive way in Greek, where English generally uses 'a' or 'per'.

(b) THE INDEFINITE ARTICLE. The following phrases from the Units show some of the most common situations where Greek has nothing to correspond to our use of 'a'.

(1) otan-ímuna-pedhí	when I was a boy
iste-fílos tu-yáni-tu-kladhá?	You're a friend of John Kladas ['s]?

ist-amerikanós, dhén-in-étsi?	You're an American, aren't you?
ine-megháli-póli-léi to-sanfrandzísko.	They say San Francisco's a big city.
ine-kaló-pedhi.	He's a good fellow.
o-yós-tu ine-fititís.	His son is a student.

When a noun that is not the subject comes after ímme 'I am' (or státhika 'I proved to be'), Greek generally does not use any indefinite article with it. (The definite article is used after ímme whenever you are specific: thus in-o-yatrós tu-burbúli "He's Bourboulis's doctor" contrasts with ine-yatrós "He's a doctor.")

(2) echi-adherfó?	Has he a brother?
échete-kóri?	Have you a daughter?
iche-kathistérisi-to-tréno-sas?	Was your train late? ('Did your train have a delay?')
o-ergháti-s-tin-eláda dhén-echi-aftokínito.	A worker in Greece doesn't have a car.
ikha-ena-spíti-ekí.	I had a house there.

An indefinite noun object of ékho 'I have' is very often not accompanied by any article, though it may be, as the last example shows.

(3) ti-kakós-kerós!	What awful weather!
ti-perierghos-áthropos pu-ise!	What a queer fellow you are!
ti-taksídhi!	What a ride!

The indefinite article does not occur in Greek with ti, even when the English equivalent is 'what a'.

(4) se-khtíma	on a farm	ya-ti-stolí-sas prépi-na-páte	To get your uniform done ('For your uniform') you must go to a tailor or a cleaning place.
se-erghostásio	in a factory	se-ráfti i-se-katharistírio.
se-vapóri	on a ship

Very often Greek does not use any article with indefinite noun objects of the preposition se 'in; on; at; to', in what have perhaps come to be set phrases.

(c) POSSESSION AND THE ARTICLES. The way Greek handles nouns accompanied by the pronouns mu, sas, etc. can be readily understood in the light of the conclusions drawn (in (a) (3) and (b) (1) above) about the use of the definite and indefinite articles.

(1) o-ándras-tis in-aeropóros.	Her husband's an aviator.
i-ghoníz-mu ménane-pánda-ki.	My parents have always lived there.
im-o-thíos-tus o-yánis.	I'm their Uncle John.
aftós-ine-o-fíloz-mu.	This is my friend.
file-mu	my friend!
pedhí-mu	my boy!
kiría-mu	madam ('my lady!')
yatré-mu	doctor!

When possession is expressed as definite or exclusive (where we use 'my', 'your', etc. in English), Greek uses the definite article, except in direct address, before the noun that is accompanied by mu, sas, etc.

(2) o-yós enos-fílu-mu ine-stratyótis.	The son of a friend of mine is a soldier.
i-kóri myas-adherfíz-mu ine-fititria.	The daughter of a sister of mine is a student.
enas-áloz-mu-fílos ine-ipálilo-se-ghrafío.	Another friend of mine is an employee in an office.
ine-fíloz-mu.	He's a friend of mine.

When possession is expressed in a way that is not definite or exclusive (where we use 'of mine', 'of yours', etc. in English), Greek uses the indefinite article, except after ime 'I am', before the noun that is accompanied by mu, sas, etc.

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. Listen to somebody's accident story, and then make him listen to yours.
2. Give someone a lesson in car driving. Tell him what you do with the brake and accelerator. Give him a few general hints: don't blow your horn all the time; drive slowly; let the other car pass you; watch out for the curves.

3. Give someone directions as to how to get to your country house: you leave from here; turn at the third road to your left; from there to the railroad station it's only ten minutes; then go straight ahead; after five minutes you reach a river with a narrow bridge; you cross the bridge and then you go to the left, etc. Make a little map, and then get him to repeat the directions so as to be sure he understands.
4. Two young men are driving along in a car and talking about the speed of automobiles. One says he used to make a hundred kilometers an hour, and the other asks how many miles that is.
5. You inquire of a Greek where there is a gas station. "Fill 'er up. Where can I find a good mechanic? How far is the town of X? Which is the best road to get there?"

Continue conversation. Additional check-up on the material of the Basic Sentences by the Leader if it seems necessary.

Review: Complete check-up on the material of the Word Study and Basic Sentences.

2. Hints on Spelling

(a) THE ALPHABET. In any dealings you may have as a foreigner with the Department of Police or other government offices in Greece it may be useful for you to be able to spell your name in answer to the questions pós-to-ghráfete i-onomá-sas? "How do you spell ('write') your name?" or pós-ghráfesteí? "How you write yourself?" But even aside from this, it is important to learn the Greek letters, and learn them in the traditional order, as given below, so as to be able to locate words in a Greek dictionary.

Α	α	ἄλφα	álfa
Β	β	βῆτα	víta
Γ	γ	γάμμα	ghámma
Δ	δ	δέλτα	dhélta
Ε	ε	ἒ ψιλόν	épsilon
Ζ	ζ	ζῆτα	zíta
Η	η	ἦτα	íta
Θ	θ	θῆτα	thíta
Ι	ι	ἰῶτα	yóta
Κ	κ	κάππα	kápa
Λ	λ	λάμβδα	lámdha
Μ	μ	μῦ	mi
Ν	ν	νῦ	ni
Ξ	ξ	ξῖ	ksi
Ο	ο	ὂ μικρόν	ómikron
Π	π	πῖ	pi
Ρ	ρ	ρῶ	ró
Σ	σ,ς	σίγμα	sígma
Τ	τ	ταῦ	taf
Υ	υ	ὗ ψιλόν	ípsilon
Φ	φ	φῖ	fi
Χ	χ	χῖ	chi
Ψ	ψ	ψῖ	psi
Ω	ω	ὦ μέγα	oméga

(b) CAPITALS. In Greek conventional spelling, as in English, capitals are sometimes used for the initial letters of words, e.g. for the first word in a sentence or in a quotation, for the names of persons, organizations (like the Government, the National Bank, the Red Cross), places, months, and sometimes days. But on the whole the Greek spelling employs capitals more sparingly than the English does. Thus there generally is no capitalization of the initial of the Greek equivalents for titles like 'Mr.', or for the points of the compass like 'the West', or even for adjectives like 'English', though names of countries ('England', etc.) and of its nationals ('Englishmen', etc.) are capitalized. When words are spelled out entirely in capitals, as on signs in public places or in newspaper headlines (normally written in the learned language), two features must be noticed: (1) as mentioned in Unit 13, no accents or breathings are written, and (2) the characters ᾳ, ῃ, ῳ are written ΑΙ, ΗΙ, ΩΙ. Examples are:

ΚΑΦΕΝΕΙΟΝ	kafenion	COFFEE SHOP
ΑΠΑΓΟΡΕΥΕΤΑΙ ΤΟ ΚΑΠΝΙΣΜΑ	apaghorévete- to-kápnizma	NO SMOKING

(c) PUNCTUATION MARKS. Most marks of punctuation that we have in English are put to corresponding use in Greek. This statement holds for the period [.], the comma [,], the exclamation point [!], the colon [:], the apostrophe ['], the hyphen [-], the diaeresis [¨], and parentheses [()].

Varying from the system we have in English, Greek uses the semicolon [;] for a question-mark; and the raised point [·] for a semicolon (and sometimes for a colon, too). You will find that a quotation may be marked in a great variety of ways: it may be enclosed in the quotation-marks we use [" "] or in different ones [„ "], [« »], or it may simply be introduced by a dash [—] at the beginning.

The diaeresis is needed for words like φαΐ (faí) 'food', to show that the two vowel letters do not mean one vowel sound as in καί (ke) 'and'. Note, however, that the diaeresis is not necessary in words like ρολόι (rolói) 'watch', where the position of the accent-mark shows that the two vowel letters can only mean two different vowels.

The loss of a vowel is generally indicated in Greek spelling by the use of the apostrophe.* The chief exceptions to this practice are verb-forms that end in -n (-ν) after the dropping of a final vowel; these are written without an apostrophe. They include not only all third person plural forms but also all forms of the singular of -me verbs in the imperfective past. Examples are: λείπουν (lípun) 'they are missing', πάν (pán) 'they go', ζοῦσαν (zúsan) 'they used to live', κοιμόμουν (kimómun) 'I was sleeping', ἦταν (ítan) 'he was; they were'. In combinations of words, when two identical vowels are pronounced as one, Greek spelling tends to favor dropping the final vowel letter (or combination of vowel letters) of the first word, as against dropping the initial vowel letter (or combination of vowel letters) of the second word. Thus examples of the more common practice are: τ' ὄνομα (t-ónoma) 'the name', ν' ἀνεβοῦμε (n-anevúme) 'let's go up', τ' εἶν' αὐτό; (tí-n-aftó?) "What's that?", μ' ἐμένα (m-eména) 'with me', εἶν' ἐδῶ (in-edhó) "He's here." Examples of the less common practice are: μὲ 'μένα, εἶναι 'δώ. Incidentally, the change of ke (καί) 'and' to ky (κι) as in ky-aftí (κι αὐτή) 'she, too', does not involve any loss of vowel, so that κι is properly spelled without an apostrophe. When the combining of words brings about the loss of an accented initial vowel of a word (when unlike vowels come together), the way the conventional spelling system handles the combination is worth especial notice. Examples are: πού 'ναι (pú-ne) 'where is?', ἐγώ 'μουνα (eghó-muna) 'I was', τό 'χω (tó-kho) 'I have it', θά 'ναι (thá-ne) 'it will be'. If the final vowel of the preceding word has a circumflex, that accent is of course retained; if the final vowel of the preceding word has an acute, like ἐγώ, the acute is not changed to a grave; in fact, in this situation words like τό and θά show an acute although they could otherwise never have any accent but a grave. Sometimes Greek spelling rejects the apostrophe in contractions and writes as one word combinations like νἀνεβοῦμε, τὄχω, θἄναι, τὄπα (tó-pa) contracted from τὸ εἶπα (to-ípa) 'I said it', showing the loss of the initial vowel of the second word, but keeping the breathing, or the breathing and accent, of the last vowel (except where, as in τὄπα, the acute must be used for the circumflex, which can never stand over ε or o).

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

na AND tha WITH -me VERBS.

(a) na-ergházome 'THAT I (ALWAYS) WORK' AND tha-ergházome 'I'LL (ALWAYS) WORK'. When you were studying the -o verbs you learned in Unit 7 that after words like prépi 'it is necessary', thléo 'I want', etc., a combination like na-dhulévo, made up of na plus an imperfective present, meant 'that I (always) work; (for me) to work'; and in Unit 10 you learned that tha plus the same form dhulévo formed an imperfective future, meaning 'I'll (always) work; I'll be working'. Now look at the following sentences:

prépi-na-kimáste-perisótero. You must get more sleep. ('You must sleep more.') efétos tha-sikónome káthe-prot-s-tis-eftá. This year I'm going to get up at seven o'clock every morning.

As you might very well have expected, na and tha may be combined with the imperfective present of -me verbs just as they were combined with the corresponding forms of -o verbs.

Here is a summary of these formations for the model verb ergházome:

na-ergházome	that I (always) work	tha-ergházome	I'll (always) work
na-ergházeste		tha-ergházeste
na-ergházete		tha-ergházete
na-erghazómaste		tha-erghazómaste
na-ergházonde		tha-ergházonde

(b) na-erghastó 'THAT I WORK (THIS ONCE)' AND tha-erghastó 'I'LL WORK (THIS ONCE)'. Consider the following examples from the Units that you have had:

eláte-n-anevúme páno-s-to-kástro. Come on, let's go up ('Come, that we may go up') to the fortress.

prépi-n-anevíte saránda-métra me-ta-pódhya-sas. You have to climb forty meters on foot.

Digitized by Google
Original from THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

tha-saz-dhtkso-káti pu-tha-sas-fant sam-bzéma. I'll show you something that you wouldn't believe could be true ('that will seem to you like a lie').

In these sentences na and tha are combined not with imperfective presents but with verb-forms based on the perfective stems anev- and fan-, stems which you have found in the perfective pasts anévika 'I went up' and fánike 'it seemed', respectively. From their use in the above examples, n-anevúme, n-anevíte, and tha-fant refer to single acts. It is evident, then, that what we have here are forms of the perfective dependent. Study closely the full set of such forms for ergházome, whose perfective stem is erghast-, as in erghástika 'I worked'.

na-erghastó	that I work (this once)
na-erghastíte na-erghastí
na-erghastúme
na-erghastúne

tha-erghastó	I'll work (this once) tha-erghastíte tha-erghastí tha-erghastúme
tha-erghastúne

You observe that the perfective dependent of a -me verb is formed by taking the perfective stem and adding to it the endings of miló 'I speak': -ó, -íte, -í, -úme, -úne.

In Unit 14 you found that certain -o verbs have perfective forms like those of -me verbs. By this time four such verbs have appeared in the Basic Sentences: vrísko 'I find', anevéno 'I go up', katevéno 'I go down', and vyéno 'I go out'. To these must be added béno 'I go in'. The following table may help you to learn their forms:

Imperfective present	Perfective past	Perfective dependent with na or tha	Perfective stem vrísko	vríka	vró	vr-
anevéno	anévika	anevó	anev-
katevéno	katévika	katevó	katev-
vyéno	výka	vghó	vgh-
béno	bíka	bó	b-

COMMENT 2

"EXTRA" PRONOUN OBJECTS.

(a) ANTICIPATED OBJECTS. Consider the way the object of the verb is expressed in the following sentences which you have already met:

kséret-to-níko-to-makrí?	Do you know Nick Makres?
ékhasa-to-panofóri-mu!	I've lost my overcoat!
o-níkos dhén-tkseре-to-fílo-mu tom-bétro, ma-tkser-eména.	Nick didn't know my friend Peter, but he knew me.
tone-kséret ton-adherfó-mu?	Do you know my brother?
dhén-do-katálava to-astío-sas.	I didn't get your joke.
thá-thela-na-to-dhyaváso to-ghrámma-tu.	I'd like to read his letter.
tí-tis-thélume tis-kabínes?	What do we need (the) dressing rooms for?
pós-to-kséret-estis-aftó?	How do you know that?
pós-tone-léne to-yó-sas?	What's your son's name? ('How do they call your son?')
pós-ta-léne ta-pedhyá-tis?	What are her children's names?

In the first three sentences above, you find the objects (to-níko, to-panofóri, to-fílo, eména) coming after the verb in the way that they would in English. In the rest of the examples the stressed objects of the verbs are led up to by unstressed personal pronouns. Thus tone-kséret ton-adherfó-mu? means literally "Do you know him — my brother?" The speakers of the language do not need to use these pronouns (tone, tine, to, etc.) in such sentences to anticipate the object, but they are very fond of doing so.

(b) REPEATED OBJECTS. Now look at the way the object of the verb is expressed in the sentences that follow:

ke-ton-gafé-sas s-tis-eftá-to-vrádhi-tone-thélete?	Do you want your coffee at seven o'clock at night, too?
óchi, ton-gafé-mu tone-thélo-tóra.	No, my coffee I want now.
ta-meghála-kutálya ta-léme-kutálya-ti-súpas.	The big spoons we call soup-spoons.
to-klidhí-mu tó-kho-s-tin-dzépi-mu.	I have my key in my pocket.

tétyo-sofér dhén-done-vrísket-éfkola-edho-péra. Such a chauffeur you can't easily find around here.
tim-betséta-tu akóma-dhen-dine-vrika. His towel I haven't found yet.
k-esás pó-saz-léne? And what's your name?
ti-yinéka-sas pós-tine-léne? What's your wife's name?
tin-adherfí-mu tine-léne-maria. My sister's name is Mary.

In the sentences just quoted the stressed object of the verb is put ahead of the verb for the purpose of emphasis, a device which we can use in English, too (e.g. "No, my coffee I want now."). But, as all the examples show, whenever the emphatic noun object (ton-gafé, ta-kutálya, etc.) or pronoun object (esás, etc.) precedes, that object is repeated in the form of an unaccented personal pronoun. Thus ton-gafé-mu tone-thélo-tóra means literally "My coffee — I want it now." When the Greek sentence is framed in this way, with the stressed object preceding the verb, the "extra" pronoun object is almost always used.

COMMENT 3

RELATIVE WORDS. In the sentence s-to-vapóri-pu-íme prépi-na-dhulévume-polí "On the ship that I'm on we have to work hard," the word pu is called a relative word because it relates or refers to some word, called the antecedent (here vapóri 'ship'), in another clause. The clause pu-íme depends on the antecedent vapóri. In other sentences, e.g. o-patéras élame-áskima-pu-sas-tó-pe "Father had no business telling you that ('did badly in that he said it to you')," the words introduced by pu apply to the any means to try to separate these two sorts of clauses, we shall use the term pu-clause for all clauses beginning with pu. In addition to this word we shall take up four others, oli, óti, and ópyos, which introduce indefinite (or general) relative clauses, and ósos, which introduces quantitative relative clauses.

(a) pu-CLAUSES.

(1) Reference by pu alone. Study carefully the following examples, almost all of which either come in this Unit or have come in earlier ones. The examples are listed according to the various shades of meaning of the pu-clauses, with some suggested English equivalents for the translation of pu itself.

'which'	i-yinéka-pu-ídhale in-i-adherfí-tu-burbúli.
'that'	párte-to-tréno pu-févyi-s-tis-okhtó.
'.....'	ine-ta-kalíter-aftokínita pu-ékhume.
Emphasis	tí-perterghos-áthropos pu-íste!
'.....'	tí-vathyá pu-ne-ta-neriá!

The woman whom you saw is Bourboulis' sister.
Take the train that leaves at eight.
They're the best cars we have.

What a queer fellow you are!
How deep the water is!

In all the sentences cited above, there is for the Greek speaker only one word pu, however different we may find the function of the clauses that come after it, and however variously we may translate it. The word pu is a particle marking the start of a clause dependent on some preceding word or clause. It is always unaccented, and the clause in which it stands never comes first in a sentence. What the exact relation of the pu-clause to the preceding element is, must be determined from the meaning of other words in the sentence. Thus i-yinéka pu- may be 'the woman who' in one case, or 'the woman whom' in another, depending on the words that follow pu. (Incidentally, in a great many situations, many more than are indicated by the notation '.....' beside the preceding examples, we may bring out the relationship of the pu-clause to the preceding clause without using any relative word in English, as in 'the ship I'm on', 'the day I got married', 'I'm sorry I ever started', etc.)

(2) Reference by pu plus an (unstressed) personal pronoun in the restrictive case (mu, mas, sas, tu, tis, or tus). Now look at these examples:

pyós-in-aftós-o-áthropos pu-tu-milí-o-mítsos?

Who's that fellow that Metsos is talking to (or to whom Metsos is talking)?

aftá-lipón-ine-ta-pedhyá pu-févyi-o-patéras-tus ya-tin-amerikí.

So those are the boys whose father is leaving for America.

se-mya-stení-yéfira pu-apo-páno-tis-pernúse k-i-ghramí-tu-sidherodhrómu stamátise-éksafna-t-aftokínito.

On a narrow bridge that had train tracks going across, too ('over top of which the railroad track also passed'), the car suddenly stalled.

You see that in every one of these sentences you have after the word pu a complete statement containing an unstressed personal pronoun in the restrictive case: tu-milí-o-mítsos 'Metsos is talking to him', févyi-o-patéras-tus ya-tin-amerikí 'their father is leaving for America', etc. The personal pronoun in the restrictive case may never be omitted in such clauses. In other words, the Greek equivalents of our 'whose', 'to whom', 'to which' are as follows:

'of which', 'whose', 'to which'	pu (. . .) tu
	pu (. . .) tis
	pu (. . .) tus
'of whom', 'whose', 'to whom'	pu (. . .) tu
	pu (. . .) tis
	pu (. . .) tus
	pu (. . .) mu
	pu (. . .) mas
	pu (. . .) sas

(3) Reference by pu plus an (unstressed) personal pronoun in the object case (me, mas, sas, tone, tine, to, tus, tis, ta). Consider carefully the form of the pu-clauses in this pair of sentences:

kâthete-ke-milt-ya-ti-mitéra-mu pu-dhén-dine-kséri. — He has to go and talk about my mother, when he doesn't [even] know her.

kâthete-ke-milt-ya-prâmata { pu-dhén-da-kséri. / pu-dhen-gséri. } — He's simply talking of things (that) he doesn't know [anything] about.

In the first of these examples the relative word pu is followed by a personal pronoun, tine, in the object case (referring to mitéra), and the Greek speaker will not say this sentence without the pronoun. In the second example the word pu may or may not be followed by the personal pronoun ta in the object case (referring to prâmata); the Greek speaker may say the sentence either way. Now the difference between the two sentences is that in the first the antecedent ti-mitéra-mu 'my mother' is completely defined already, so that the following clause is one not of definition, but only of description; but in the second the antecedent prâmata 'things' requires the following clause to define it. Of clauses of this latter kind (clauses of definition) you have had several, without personal pronoun object, in Section (1) above. Another example of the former kind (clauses of description) is this:

ekhume-ton-dsim-lóndo pu-dhen-done-nikâi-kanéna-s-to-pâlema. — We have Jim Londos, whom nobody can beat in wrestling.

(b) INDEFINITE AND QUANTITATIVE RELATIVE CLAUSES.

(1) oti 'what'. Among the sentences in the present Unit there occurred the following:

léo-oti-mu-lêne. I'm [just] saying what people have told me ('they say to me').

The relative pronoun óti, unlike pu, does not refer to any preceding word in the sentence. Like our word 'what', it stands for indefinite things, not for persons. It is less definite than aftó pu (aftá pu), as in the example s-tin-eládha-vlépete to-dhéftero-pátoma in-aftó-pu-ne-s-tin-amerikí-to-tríto "In Greece, you see, the second floor is the one that counts as ('that is') the third in America."

(2) óti 'whatever'. In earlier Units you have heard the following sentences:

ekí-vrískete óti-thélete. There you'll find whatever you want.

káno-óti-boró ya-na-efkharistíso-to-fílo-mu. I do whatever I can to please my friend.

Accented óti differs from unaccented oti only in being more indefinite or general, like English 'whatever' as compared to 'what', and it is unchangeable in form. In addition, accented óti may be an adjective, as in this case:

párte óti-vivlío-thélete. Take whatever book you want.

(3) ópyos 'whoever'. Now let's take this sentence from the present Unit:

ópyo-sas-tó-p-aftó káthete-ke-milí-ya-prámata pu-dhén-da-kséri. Whoever told you that is simply talking ('sits and talks') of things (that) he doesn't know [anything] about.

The pronoun ópyos, equivalent to our word 'whoever', is an indefinite relative applying to persons. When, as in the above example, not only the person but even the set to which the person belongs (male or female) is indefinite, the Greek speaker uses ópyos, masculine only. Thus, as óti applies to completely indefinite things, ópyos in the masculine applies to completely indefinite persons.

(4) ópyos, -a, -o 'whoever', 'whichever (one)'. Next consider these sentences:

ekho-dhyó-kóres. párte ópya-thélete. I have two daughters. Take whichever one you wish.

tha-sas-aghorásso ópyo-kapélo-sas-arési-kalítter-ap-ta-tría. I'll buy you whichever hat you like the best of the three.

In the examples given here, the individual (person or thing) to which ópyos refers is indefinite, but the set to which it belongs is definite. In these circumstances Greek uses ópyos, which then takes the gender and number of the word to which it refers. It may be either a pronoun (equivalent to 'whoever' or 'whichever (one)' in English) or an adjective (equivalent to 'whichever').

(5) ósos, -i, -o 'as much as' (plur. 'as many as'). Finally, consider this example:

mím-bistével-óla-ósa-saz-léne. Don't believe everything ('all things that') people tell you.

Whenever quantity or numbers enter into the reference, Greek speakers use not pu, but a special relative pronoun ósos. The word ósos is often strengthened by ólos, as in the example just cited. Like óti and ópyos, the relative ósos, too, may be used as an adjective, as in this sentence:

fáte óso-tirí-thélete. Eat as much cheese as you want.

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested topics:

1. Try to describe to a friend the Olympic games and the Marathon race.
2. You would like to see the gymnastic festival in the Athenian Stadium. A friend gives you directions and describes the Stadium to you.
3. You tell a Greek about sports in America (football, tennis, golf, etc.). The Greek tells you about the popular sports in Greece (swimming, running, wrestling, hunting, etc.).
4. Tell someone about Sunday morning at the shore (how you got there, what the weather was like, whether the water was warm or cold, how you rented a boat, etc.).
5. Brag about some friend of yours who is a wonderful athlete. Invent some good stories about what he has done.
6. There are two types of Greeks. Try to define them as far as sports are concerned.

Continue conversation. Additional check-up on the material of the Basic Sentences by the Leader if it seems necessary.

Review: Complete check-up on the material of the Word Study and Basic Sentences.

2. Hints on Pronunciation and Spelling

(a) PROCLITICS. In the sentence dhém-boró-na-sas-to-pó "I can't tell you (it)" the unaccented words na, sas, and to are called proclitics. A proclitic is a word that has no accent in itself, but always occurs in a phrase in which it is followed (either immediately or after one or more other proclitics) by a word that has an accent. (Note that an accented word, like dhén 'not' in dhém-boró-na-sas-to-pó, may appear unaccented within some phrase, like akóma-dhen-dine-vrika "I haven't found it yet," but this does not make the word a proclitic.) The accent-marks which in the conventional spelling are written over almost all the proclitics are to be ignored in reading. These are the proclitics you have met so far:

Definite article: o (ὁ), i (ἡ), to (τό), ton (τόν), tin (τήν), tu (τοῦ), tis (τῆς), i (οἱ), ta (τά), tus (τούς), tis (τίς).

Personal pronouns: me (μέ), mu (μοῦ), mas (μᾶς), sas (σᾶς), tone (τόνε), ton (τόν), tu (τοῦ), tine (τήνε), tin (τήν), tis (τῆς), to (τό), tus (τούς), tis (τίς), ta (τά).

Prefixed title: barba- (μπάρμπα–).

Prepositions: se (σέ), me (μέ), ya (γιά), apo (ἀπό).

Conjunctions: ke (καί), ma (μά), para (παρά), na (νά), otan (ὅταν).

Particle: tha (θά).

Sometimes it happens that alongside a given proclitic there exists a word which, as regards form, differs from it only in having a stress, and that along with this difference in stress goes a difference in meaning. These are the pairs that have occurred up to the present Unit:

Proclitic	Accented word
enas (ἕνας), mya (μιά), ena (ἕνα), enos (ἑνός), myas (μιᾶς), enan (ἕναν) 'a'	énas (ἕνας), myá (μιά), éna (ἕνα), etc. 'one'
oti (ὅ,τι) 'what' ('that which')	óti (ὅ,τι) 'whatever'
yati (γιατί) 'because'	yatí (γιατί) 'why?'

pu (πού) mark of a relative clause pos (πώς) 'that'
min (μήν) 'by any chance' san (σάν) 'like; as' (e.g. san-dom-batéra-mu 'like my father') opos (ὅπως) 'as'
opu (ὅπου) 'where'

pú (ποῦ) 'where?'
pós (πῶς) 'how?'
mín (μήν) '(do) not'
sán (σάν) 'just like; just as' (e.g. sá-s-tis-óperes-tu-vághner 'just as in Wagner's operas') ópos (ὅπως) 'in whatever way; however' ópu (ὅπου) 'wherever'

(b) ENCLITICS. In the phrases o-patéraz-mu 'my father' or ná-ta-mas! "That's a good one on us!" ('Behold them for us!') the unaccented words mu, ta, and mas are called enclitics. An enclitic is a word that has no accent in itself, but always occurs in a phrase in which it is preceded (either immediately or with another enclitic before it) by a word that has an accent. In Unit 4 you learned that if an unaccented word of this type, like tis, happens to stand right after a word that ordinarily has the accent on the second from the last syllable, like ónoma 'name', this accent shifts to the last syllable, e.g. t-onomá-tis 'her name'. The conventional spelling, in such a case, calls for an accent not only on the last syllable but also on the second syllable from the last, e.g. τ' ὄνομά της. Except for the word dha (δά), enclitics have no accents on them in the conventional spelling. These are the enclitics you have met so far:

Personal pronouns: me (με), mu (μου), mas (μας), sas (σας), tone (τονε), tu (του), tine (τηνε), tis (της), to (το), tus (τους), tis (τις), ta (τα).
Emphatic particle: dha (δά).

(c) WHEN PROCLITICS AND ENCLITICS MAY GET AN ACCENT. You will remember that in the Hints on Pronunciation in Unit 11 you were given the following rule: If two words are closely run together, the first of which ends in an unstressed vowel and the second of which begins with a stressed vowel, the initial vowel of the second word disappears and the final vowel of the first word takes over its accent, provided that the final vowel of the first word is stronger than the initial vowel of the second word, e.g. dheká-ksi 'sixteen', from dheka-éksi. Now, this process takes place most frequently when the first word in the combination is a proclitic. Thus to-ékho 'I have it' may become tó-kho (τό' χω or τὄχω), and tha-tne 'it will be' may become thá-ne (θά 'ναι or θάναι).

A phrase like dhóste-mas 'give us' behaves exactly like ónoma 'name': just as the accent shifts to the last syllable of ónoma if an enclitic follows it, e.g. t-onomá-tis (τ' ὄνομά της) 'her name', so if an enclitic comes after dhóste-mas the accent shifts to mas, as in dhoste-más-ta (written δώστε μάς τα) 'give them to us', even though mas is an enclitic.

(d) VOWEL LETTERS IN FINAL SYLLABLES. There are many words in Greek that end in -n only when they stand before another word in a phrase (for example, aftón-don-gírio 'that man', yirízun-i-psarádhes "The fishermen are coming back"),* and, mostly from the learned language, there are a mere handful of words like lipón 'so' or prín 'before' that end in -n even at the end of a phrase. But except for these, native Greek words end either in a vowel or in a vowel plus -s. The vowels a and u are always spelled α and ου respectively, so that they present no problem, but as you know, o, e, and i have more than one spelling. Now, there is a traditional way of spelling each ending, depending on the form of the word concerned. For example, the sound o as an ending of the I-form of a verb is written -ω, while the same sound as an ending of a masculine or neuter noun or adjective is written -ο. If you know this and similar differences in spelling, you will be able to identify types and forms of words much more rapidly in your reading than you could otherwise.

Here are the most important variations for you to study in the spelling of final syllables:

Spelling	Found in	Example
−ω	1st person s. of -o verbs	πιάνω (pyáno) 'I catch'
	fem. nouns in -o, s. subj.-obj.	Φρόσω (fróso) 'Phroso'
	adverbs of place in -o	πάνω (páno) 'up'
−ο	neut. nouns and adjectives in -o, s. subj.-obj.	πιάνο (pyáno) 'piano' masc. nouns and adjectives in -os, s. obj.	καλό (kaló) 'good'
−ως	fem. nouns in -o, s. rest.	ἀδερφό (adherfó) 'brother'

−ος	masc. nouns and adjectives in -os, s. subj.	Φρόσως (frósos) 'Phroso's'
	neut. nouns in -os, s. subj.-obj.	ἀμέσως (amésos) 'immediately'
−μαι	1st person s. of -me verbs, imperf. pres.	ἀδερφός (adherfós) 'brother'
−με	1st person p. of -o verbs	καλός (kalós) 'good' μέρος (méros) 'place' κοιμοῦμαι (kimúme) 'I sleep' ξυπνοῦμε (ksipnúme) 'we wake up'

*Though in some dialects forms like aftón or yirízun can come at the end of a phrase.

Except for the ending −ᾶ (-á) in verb-forms like ξυπνᾶ (ksipná) 'he wakes up', for which you have learned ξυπνάει (ksipnái).

1. Word Study

Comment 1

The imperatives of -me verbs. In Unit 11, when you were studying commands and prohibitions, you found that the Greek verb has two sorts of imperatives, perfective and imperfective, and you learned the way they are formed in the -o verbs. Now, the same two kinds of imperatives, used in corresponding circumstances, exist in the -me verbs.

(a) Commands. One example appears in this Unit:

eláte-pedhyá, sikothíte k-in-arghá. Boys, we'd better be leaving ('get up!'); it's late.

The word sikothíte is the perfective imperative of the verb sikónome 'I get up'. The form of such an imperative is exactly the same as that of the second person of the perfective dependent.

In this regard there are three verbs, vrísko, vyéno, and béno, that deserve special notice. Although, as you have learned, they form their perfective pasts (vríka, vyíka, bíka) and their perfective dependents (vró, vghó, bó) like -me verbs, they remain -o verbs in their perfective imperatives, which, furthermore, are of peculiar form:

/vr/	vréste	find
/vgh/	evghíte	go out
/b/	embíte	go in

Now by way of contrast consider the following commands:

sikóneste káthe-proí-s-tis-eftá!	Get up at seven every morning.
ergházeste-pyó-polí!	Work harder ('more').
kimásle-perisóteroi	Get more sleep. ('Sleep more.')

All three of these commands direct someone to do something always, or repeatedly, and the verb-forms used are the imperfective imperatives of sikónome, ergházome, and kimúme, respectively. What you found for the -o verbs is true for -me verbs as well: the form of an imperfective imperative is identical with that of the second person of the imperfective present. It should be added, however, that there is an equivalent for these imperfective imperatives which is in much more common use; this will be treated in a later Unit.

(b) PROHIBITIONS. The following are prohibitions using -me verbs:

Perfective

skeftíte-to-kalá, mím-bandreftí-amésos.	Think it over well; don't get married right away.
pís-ap-to-spíti th-akúsete-fonés ke-pirovolizmús, ma-esís-mí-fovithíte.	Behind the house you'll hear yelling and shooting; but don't you be afraid.

Imperfective

mí-fovásie dhespiní.	Don't be afraid (now or at any time), miss.
mí-stékeste-brostá-s-tim-bórta.	Don't (continue to) stand in front of the door.

You see that, as with the -o verbs, prohibitions are expressed by the use of mín either with the perfective dependent or with the imperfective present.

COMMENT 2

ksurtzo 'I SHAVE (SOMEONE)' AND ksurtzome 'I GET SHAVED'. Up to the present Unit every verb that you have met you have learned as either an -o verb or a -me verb. But in this Unit you find verbs that have forms both of the -o type and of the -me type:

-o type	-me type
skotóni-o-énas-ton-álone.	dhe-skotónete-poté-apo-tus-túrkus.
They kill each other. ('The one kills the other.')	He never gets killed by the Turks.
ékhasa-to-kapélo-mu!	kháthike-to-kapélo-mu!
I've lost my hat!	My hat's lost ('has gotten lost')!

When a verb possesses both kinds of forms, only those of the -o type can take an object (here ton-álone, to-kapélo-mu), though they are frequently used without one, while those of the -me type cannot take an object. At least, exceptions to this latter statement are so rare that if you meet -me forms that have an object, you can almost always take it that the verbs in question have no -o forms.

As you see from the examples above on the right-hand side, the -me forms of an -o verb are used for actions in which the subject alone is affected, sometimes by an outside agency introduced by apo (e.g. apo-tus-túrkus 'by the Turks'). There is almost no -o verb whose -me forms cannot be used with apo plus an agent (e.g. skotónete apo 'is killed by', ksurtzete apo 'is shaved by'). On the other hand such use of -me forms with apo is impossible for verbs like fovúme 'I fear', which have no -o forms. Such a thought as "He is feared by his employees" must be expressed in some other way, most commonly by turning the sentence around: i-ipalilí-tu tone-fovúnde "His employees fear him."

(a) FORMATION. Before going further into the question of the meanings of -me forms to -o verbs, you will want to know what -o verbs within your present knowledge have -me forms and how you can figure out those forms. Well, you can assume that practically any -o verb that can take an object (that is, unlike févgho 'I go away') has forms of the -me type, too. Conversely, of the -me verbs that you know, the following have -o forms as well:

pandrévome	'I get married'	pandrévo	'I marry off'
sikónome	'I get up; I rise'	sikóno	'I lift; I raise' pnígome	'I get drowned'	pnígo	'I drown (someone)'

After this Unit no verb will be given you as a -me verb unless it either has no -o forms or unless the -me forms are so unlike the corresponding -o forms in meaning that it is practically a separate verb, like varyéme 'I am bored' beside varó 'I strike'.

Next it is necessary for you to look closely at certain features of the -me forms, for there is a definite working relationship between a given kind of -o verb and the -me forms that go with it.

(1) Imperfective endings. Compare the following examples:

skotóno: skotónome, -este, etc.	filó: filyéme, -yéste, etc.
vrísko: vrískome	kunó: kunyéme
pyáno: pyánome	rotó: rotyéme
kóvo: kóvome	nikó: nikyéme

From this table you see that -o verbs whose imperfective stems end in a consonant and which in the imperfective present are accented on the last syllable before the ending have -me forms like those of ergházome 'I work' (thus '-o: '-ome), whereas -o verbs which in the imperfective present are accented on the ending have -me forms like those of arnyéme 'I deny' (thus -ó: -yéme). And this means that the imperfective pasts are skotonómuna, vriskómuna, etc. (like erghazómuna), and filyómuna, kunyómuna, etc. (like arnyómuna).

In addition to these two varieties of -o verbs there are, as you know, a few -o verbs whose imperfective stems end in a vowel. Of these you have had akúo 'I hear', tróo 'I eat', and léo 'I say' (besides páo 'I go', which has no -me forms). Compare their -o forms and -me forms in the imperfective present and past:

Present		Imperfective Past
-o	-me	-o	-me
akúo	akúete 'it is heard'	ákua	akuótane 'it used to be heard'
trôo	trôyete 'it is eaten'	étrogha	troghótane 'it used to be eaten'
lêo	lêyete 'it is said'	êlegha	leghótane 'it used to be said'

(2) Perfective stems. Although one imperfective stem serves for both the -o and the -me forms of a verb, there are always two perfective stems, one for the -o forms and another for the -me forms. But if you know the perfective stem for the -o forms, you can almost always arrive at the stem for the -me forms, for there is a systematic correspondence between the two stems, as you will see from the examples of the verbs below, which are typical in their formation. In the tables that are given here, each verb is cited in the I-form of the imperfective present (the form under which you would look it up in the Finder List), followed by the perfective stem for the -o forms and the perfective stem for the -me forms.

Along with verbs like those given above, which represent common patterns, you have had a certain number of verbs which do not conform to any common models as regards the two perfective stems, so that they must simply be learned by heart. Here is a complete list of verbs of this character that you have met up to this point.

o-kurêas ksurtzi-to-yáni.	The barber shaves John.
pti-lipón-o-yánis ke-ksurtzete.	So John goes and gets shaved.
o-yánis ksurtzete-káthe-méra-ap-ton-gurêa.	John is shaved by the barber every day.
o-yánis ksurtzete-mónos-tu.	John shaves himself ('by himself').

Whereas the form ksurtzi means 'shaves (someone); puts (someone) into a state of smoothness of face', the form ksurtzete means 'gets shaved; gets into a state of smoothness of face'. In itself the verb-form ksurtzete no more answers the question "Who does the shaving?" than the English 'gets shaved'. According to your knowledge of John's habits or circumstances you may translate ksurtzete in the examples above as 'shaves himself' ("reflexive"), 'shaves' ("intransitive"), or 'is shaved' ("passive"). There are not separate or special verb-forms in Greek to express these differences. Note that if you want to stress the fact that John is shaved by himself and no one else, you add mónos-tu 'by himself' to the statement o-yánis ksurtzete. The essential thing to grasp about the -me forms of any -o verb is that they express getting into some state or condition, whether "naturally" or by the subject's own action or by some outside agency or means (introduced by apo).

With this in mind examine the following examples from the Basic Sentences, noting the various ways the -me forms are translated into English:

ap-ti-skinî akúonde-pirovolizmî.	Shooting is heard ('Shots are heard') from the stage.
dhem-bjánete-poté.	He never lets himself get caught.
ap-tin-iméra-pu-pandréftika	from the day that I got married (or that I married)
voíthya ke-pnîyika!	Help, I'm drowning ('I have drowned')!
óti-sikóthika.	I just got up.
varyóndane-na-kunithûne.	They couldn't be bothered getting out of the way. ('They were bored that they move.')
k-i-dhyó pu-filyúnde?	And the two that are kissing (or are kissing each other)?

As was stated earlier in this Comment, you can assume that in the case of practically every -o verb the -me forms can be used like the form skotónete 'is killed' in the example dhe-skotónete-poté-apo-tus-túrkus, where an agent is expressed (after apo), or like skotóthike 'he was killed' in the sentence skotóthike-s-tom-bólemo "He was killed in the war," where an agent is implied. What you will need to notice especially is which verbs may also have their -me forms used in situations where, as in most of the examples quoted above, no agent outside the subject is involved at all. You could not predict the fact — you can only note and remember it when you find it out, that, for example, skotóthike can mean 'he killed himself; he committed suicide' as well as 'he was killed', or, to take a milder example, that filyúnde can mean 'they are kissing each other' as well as 'they are being kissed (by others)'. Observe that where the action of a -me form (usually in the plural) is by nature reciprocal, as in the last example mentioned, we may bring that out in English by the words 'each other'. One sentence which you have heard, dhén-dine-pandréftike "He didn't marry her (or didn't get married to her)," contains a use of pandrévome that is quite peculiar in that this -me form takes an object; there are only a few verbs of this sort.

Finally it should be pointed out that -me forms of -o verbs are often employed in situations where we use the indefinite 'you', 'one', 'they', or 'people'. Consider these examples:

dhem-byánete-poté.	You [can] never catch him. ('He never gets caught.')
ap-ti-skint akúonde-pirovolizmí.	One hears shooting ('Shots are heard') from the stage.
tétyes-foresyés dhé-foryúnde-edho-péra.	They don't wear suits like that around here.
tróyete-me-ládhi.	People eat it with oil.

This use of the -me forms of -o verbs is only one method of expressing an indefinite subject of a sentence. Here are various other ways, most of which you already know from the Basic Sentences.

pú-plénun-edhó-ta-rúkha?	Where do people get their laundry done here?
léo-oli-mu-léne.	I'm [just] saying what people have told ('tell') me.
ópu-ky-am-báte vrískete-mármaro-s-tin-atikí.	Wherever you go in Attica, you find marble.
ine-megháli-póli-léi to-sanfrandzísko.	They say San Francisco's a big city. ('It's a big city, one says, San Francisco.') tin-giryakí-o-kósmos pái-s-tin-eklisyá.	On Sunday people go to church.
edhó móno-otan-in-árostos-kanenas pái-s-to-farmakío.	Here a person only goes to the drugstore when he's sick.
otan-ín-enas-éksipnos dhé-khriázete-dhaskálus.	When you're bright, you don't need teachers.

As you see, the means of expressing 'people', 'you', 'they', etc. include the use of the third person plural and the second person of any verb, kanénas, enas, and o-kózmos, as well as the stereotyped form léi ('one says'). These expressions are much more often resorted to, as a matter of fact, than the -me forms of -o verbs.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all the English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You invite a girl to go to the theater with you: you have two tickets; they are giving an operetta, not an opera. "That's fine! I want to laugh. I don't like heavy music," she says. "And I won't need to change my suit," you add.
2. A and B are discussing which is better, the opera or the movies: A says that the opera has beautiful music, fine scenes, etc. B says that the opera is too expensive and that when he is tired he prefers to go to the movies.
3. You discuss the singing and piano playing of a common friend: noise instead of music; the neighbors; the arrival of a policeman, etc.
4. Describe the Karaguez to a friend: a little theater in a coffee-shop or a square, or on one side of a street; little men of paper instead of human beings; always the same scene — the little house of Karaguez on the one side, the big house of his rich Turkish neighbor on the other. Many acts, many intermissions. Everybody drinks coffee, smokes, or does whatever he likes. Much shooting, much shouting, and many political jokes. The persons of the Karaguez: Karaguez himself, his mother, his wife and child, and an uncle of his called "Uncle" George, a beautiful girl, a young fellow of twenty, and lots of Turks. Every person has his own song. What does the Karaguez represent?
5. Try to point out the characteristic features of the Greek as presented in the plays of the Karaguez.

Continue conversation. Additional check-up on the material of the Basic Sentences by the Leader if it seems necessary.

Review: Complete check-up on the material of the Word Study and Basic Sentences.

UNIT 18

REVIEW

SECTION A—WHAT DO YOU KNOW IN GREEK?

To the Group Leader: Section A of this Unit consists of eight very short anecdotes to be read to the group by the Guide. If you have no Guide, choose, or have the group choose, one of the members to do the reading. Get some one whose voice and pronunciation are good and clear, and who has familiarized himself with Greek spelling. The texts of the eight anecdotes are printed in the Guide's Manual.

See that each member of the group is provided with a sheet of paper and a pen or pencil. Before the first anecdote is read, give the group two minutes to familiarize themselves with the five Greek questions that are asked about it. Then have the first anecdote read twice, and give them three minutes to answer the set of questions, writing down, IN ENGLISH, a simple answer to each question.

Follow this procedure with each of the eight anecdotes. After the quiz is over, correct it as in Units 6 and 12. Call an answer correct only if it shows clearly that the group member really understood both the question asked and the part of the anecdote which gave the answer to the question.

This Unit is again a review of the work covered up to now. For the most part it is like Units 6 and 12. The first Section, however, is not a true-false quiz, but a group of eight anecdotes about which questions are asked. These questions are printed below. Familiarize yourself with the five questions on the first anecdote, and then listen carefully as the anecdote is read to you. Don't try to write down the answers to the questions while the anecdote is being read; either sit still and listen, or at the most just write down a key word for each question. After the conversation has been read, write down IN ENGLISH your answer to each question. Make your answers brief and to the point. Then get ready for the next anecdote by reading over the next set of five questions. Follow this same procedure with each anecdote.

When all the anecdotes have been read, and you have had a chance to answer all the questions, the Guide or Group Leader will go over the answers with you.

Section F — Conversation Review

Hold a series of conversations on any of the topics covered so far. All members of the group should have a chance to take part. Here are some suggested topics:

1. You meet an old home-town acquaintance, and the two of you discuss what's become of all your old friends: this one's married to so-and-so's daughter and they have three children; that one's a doctor on a ship and hasn't got married; another got killed in the war, etc.

Digitized by Google
Original from THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

2. Invite someone to one of the beaches near Athens. Talk about your likes and dislikes with regard to bathing beaches, the sea, swimming, etc. Discuss the people you meet there, amusements, restaurants, coffee-shops, etc. Have him tell you of the bathing customs in his little home town.

3. Discuss your favorite sport with a Greek. Tell him which sport you like; which sport is characteristic of America. Explain one he doesn't know. Talk about athletic teams, Olympic games, and gymnastic festivals.

4. Ask a girl to go to the movies with you. Talk over your preference among forms of entertainment — plays, operas, operettas, movies. Have her tell you about the Karaguez play. End with arrangements for a meeting, and say good-bye.

5. Meet someone at a railroad station. Help him (or her) buy a ticket, find a porter, take care of the baggage, etc. Go in and have a coffee or other refreshments until the train gets in.

6. You travel on a ship and start talking with the other passengers about your destination and theirs, the places you have seen, the countries, languages, customs, etc. that you like.

7. Go shopping with someone. Discuss the things you want to buy, the places you go to get them, the prices, etc. Include a visit to a barber shop and a discussion with the owner of a variety-stand about Greek cigarettes.

8. Two men meet at the room of one of them. While one dresses, the other talks to him. They discuss clothes, the difficulty of getting them cleaned, pressed, etc. Then they discuss jobs, girls, etc. They leave together for dinner or to play bridge (brtdz) at the house of a common friend.

9. Tell someone about a trip you've just taken in the Greek countryside: first by boat, then by car, then by mule. Make up a hard-luck story about the trip: bad weather, an old vessel, difficulty in hiring a car, no gasoline, narrow roads, curves, mules that balked, etc. Talk about the beautiful landscape, and the kind and hospitable character of the Greek country folk.

10. A police officer is taking down information about you. You are asked to spell your name, to give your address, the place you come from, your profession, the names of people in town who know you. You tell the officer you want to stay for a long time — one year and three months — and ask for a permit.

The examples in the middle column are all from the Basic Sentences of the present Unit. Until this lesson all the second-person forms you had met were like those in the left-hand column above. You now see that Greek, unlike present-day English, has two sets of second-person forms: esís-forms and esí-forms, to name them after the words for 'you' in the subject case. This difference extends to both pronouns and verbs. And if you compare the verb-forms above, you observe that whereas all the esís-forms of the verb end in an element -te, the esí-forms are all characterized by an element s.

(a) USE. The esís-form is the one that is regularly used in speaking to a single person with whom you are not on intimate terms, and this is the form you should normally use in conversation. Notice that when John and the post-office clerk are talking in the Basic Sentences of this Unit, it is the esís style that they employ.

The esí-form, on the other hand, is generally used only in addressing a single person with whom the speaker is on a standing of easy familiarity, in other words, in an atmosphere in which we call someone by his first name in English. This is the style employed, you notice, between George and the post-office clerk, who have long known each other. A Greek speaker uses this form in talking to a member of his family, to any of his friends or buddies, to his girl friend, to a servant, driver, porter, or waiter, to a child or an animal.

Children and young people always use esí to one another. In general, remember that the use of esí indicates familiarity and that it is presumptuous to use it to someone with whom you are not on terms of friendship.

For speaking to one person, then, Greek offers a choice of two you-forms, which are typified in this pair of sentences:

ti-kakí-pu-tse-fróso! Don't be that way ('How mean you are'), Phroso.

ti-kakí-pu-tste dhespinís! Don't be that way, miss.

The fact that each of the verb-forms here is singular is clinched by the use of the same form of the adjective in both examples.

On the other hand, there is only one you-form for the plural, whether you are addressing persons with familiarity or with reserve:

ti-kakés-pu-tste-i-dhyó-sas! You're acting mean, both of you.

ti-kakés-pu-tste kirtez-mu! You're acting mean, ladies.

Familiarity is expressed not only by the use of the esí-form, but by certain ways of greeting or addressing people: kaliméra plus first name, e.g. kaliméra táki 'hello, Takes', (compared with kaliméra-sas, or kaliméra-sas kírie plus last name 'how do you do, Mr. . . .', or kaliméra-sas kiría plus last name 'how do you do, Mrs. . . .'); moré 'you, there! say!', moré-pedhí 'my boy' (plural moré-pedhyá); yá-su 'hello, there!' (plural yá-sas).

A special case is the use of esí with the country folk: a peasant or fisherman will use esí to you and you may use it to him, even though you are total strangers to each other. But then the expression of reserve or respect comes out in the use, along with the esí-form, of certain titles or terms of address which are all complimentary equivalents for 'you', varying in degree of deference. Toward you the peasant may use (to give only the most important expressions) tu-lóghu-su, i-afendyá-su, afendikó, kírie, kiría, etc.; toward him you may use tu-lóghu-su, kir- plus first name (for a man), kira- plus first name (for a woman), barba- plus first name (for an elderly man), kapetan- plus first name (for the owner of a boat), etc.

(b) FORMS.

(1) Pronouns. If you look back at the first four examples given at the beginning of this Comment, you will see that for the familiar 'you', singular, the forms are as follows:

	Accented	Unaccented
subj.	esí
obj.	eséna	se
rest.	eséna	su

Digitized by Google

For the use of esénа after prepositions, as in the second example above, look back to Section (c) of Comment 2 in Unit 14. Both se and su may, of course, lose their vowel before another word beginning with a vowel, e.g. s-efkharistó (for se-efkharistó) 'thank you', s-arésiʔ (for su-arésiʔ) "Do you like it?" But besides this, su may even lose its vowel before the object pronouns of the third person, as in the phrases s-to-léo 'I tell you (it)', s-tó-pa (for su-to-ípa) 'I told you (it)', dhé-s-ta-édhosaʔ "Didn't I give them to you?"

(2) Verb-forms. If you look closely at the forms cited in this section, you will find that there are certain practical rules you can follow to figure out the est-forms of any verb (with the exception of the imperatives, which will be taken up later on). The easiest way to arrive at any est-form is to start from the he-form of the same set. The verbs used for purposes of illustration are for the most part those you have learned as models.

he-form		est-form
kséri	knows	kséris	you know
milí	speaks	milís	you speak
tha-miltsi	he will speak	tha-miltsis	you will speak

SUMMARY: Where the he-form ends in a consonant plus -i, the est-form is made by adding -s.*

he-form		est-form
ksipnái	wakes up	ksipnás	you wake up pái	goes	pás	you go
léi	says	lés	you say
trói	eats	trós	you eat
akúi	hears	akús	you hear
tha-fái	he will eat	tha-fás	you will eat

SUMMARY: Where the he-form ends in a vowel plus -i, the est-form is made by substituting -s for -i.

*To this group should be added the perfective dependent form kats, as in mín-gats 'don't get burned!', from the verb kéo /kaps/ka/ 'I burn'.

SUMMARY: Where the he-form ends in -te, the esí-form is made by substituting -se for -te. The verb 'to be' has íse 'you are'.

5.	he-form		esí-form
	erghazótane	he used to work	erghazósuna	you used to work

	ítane	he used to be	ísuna	you used to be

SUMMARY: Where the he-form ends in -tane, the esí-form is made by substituting -suna for -tane.

The following table presents all the esí-forms (except the imperatives) of the typical verb khâno 'I lose' (with khânome 'I get lost'), with the esís-forms alongside for comparison:

COMMENT 2

About limiting words. By now you have had a good many pronouns and adjectives whose function is to limit, either by identifying, like pyós 'which (one)?', kápyos 'a certain (one)', or by telling an amount or number, like kámbosi 'several', merikí 'some'. Just how some of these are used and how certain ones differ from others in meaning will be explained later in this Comment, but first there are some forms which need to be studied especially.

(a) Forms.

(1) Object case of the singular. Observe the endings of the limiting words in the following pairs of examples:

Adjective		Pronoun
me-kápyon-aeropóro	with a certain aviator	me-kápyone	with a certain one thélo-aftón-don-ándra.	I want this man.	aftóne-thélo.	I want him.
pái-se-ópyon-gurêa-thêli.	He goes to whichever barber he wants.	pái-se-ópyone-thêli.	He goes to whichever one he wants.
apo-pyóm-bzará	from which fisherman?	apo-pyóne	from which one?
y-aftín-din-girta	for this woman	y-aftíne	for her vlépete-tin-áli-kirta?	Do you see the other woman?	vlépete-tin-áline?	Do you see the other one?

From the first four examples you see that there are certain limiting words which in the object case of the masculine singular show final -n when they are adjectives, but final -ne when they are pronouns. (Of course, by this time you know how final -n is lost before certain consonants, so that, for example, you would not be surprised to hear me-kápyo-fílo 'with a certain friend' beside me-kápyon-aeropóro.) The last two examples in the set given above show that there are certain limiting words which in the object case of the feminine singular show final -ne when they are pronouns, whether as adjectives they have final -n (like aʃtín), or not (like áli).* The following table presents the forms of these words in the object case of the singular:

Masculine		Feminine
Adjective	Pronoun	Adjective	Pronoun
*ekínon	ekínone	*ekínin	ekínine
*túton	túlone	*túlin	túline
*aʃtón	aʃtóne	*aʃtín	aʃtíne
álon	álone	áli	áline
pyón	pyóne	pyá
ópyon	ópyone	ópya
kápyon	kápyone	kápya
tétyon	tétyone	tétya
énan	énane	myá
kanénan	kanénane	kamyá

While this matter of final -ne is up for consideration, notice also the following cases:

k-i-marta pandréʃtike-k-ekíni. ma-ptre-ándra-ʃtokhóne. — And Mary, she married, too. But she got a husband [who was] poor.

in-altíhya? tídhes-to-yáni? ton-tídhyone? — Is that so? You saw John? In person?

eghó-ton-gafé-mu tone-ptno-varíne. — I drink my coffee strong.

pyá-foresyá-protimáte-lipón, tin-áspri t-ti-mávrine? — Well, which suit do you like better, the white one or the black?

échi-fílo? kalóne-fílo? — Has he a friend? A real friend?

*In contrast to the many masculine forms which have final -ne, there are very few such feminines, and even in these the use of final -ne is always optional (thus, aʃtí beside aʃtíne, etc.).

See footnote to p. 213.

These examples show that there is a possibility of using the ending -ne with an adjective in the object case of the masculine or feminine singular. This happens most of all with a masculine adjective, especially one in -os, when it comes at the end of a phrase or clause, and it may sometimes happen, as in the last example, with an adjective that precedes a noun, provided that the adjective is stressed. The ending -ne occurs less frequently with feminine adjectives, and rarely, if ever, with those in -a.

(2) Restrictive case of the singular. Now consider the endings of the limiting words in these examples:

þyanû-to-lês-aflô?	Are you telling me? ('To whom are you saying this?') aflunû-o-patéras	this man's father
ine-dhikô-sas-to-panoflôri?—ôchi, alunû.	Is this coat yours?—No, [it's] somebody else's.

If the person referred to in the last case were female, the answer would be:

ôchi, alinîs.	No [it's] some other woman's.

Just as some limiting words have a special ending -ne in the object case of the singular when they are pronouns, so some of them, as pronouns, have special endings in the restrictive case of the singular, for which you can refer to the following list of the words in question:

Masculine and neuter		Feminine
Adjective	Pronoun	Adjective	Pronoun
ekînu	ekinû	ekînis	ekinîs
tûtu	tutunû	tûtis	tutinîs
aflû	aflunû	aflîs	aflinîs
âlu	alunû	âlis	alinîs
þyû	þyanû	þyâs	þyanîs
ôpyu	opyanû	ôpyas	opyanîs
kâpyu	kapyanû	kâpyas	kapyanîs
enôs	*myanû	myâs	*myanîs

*The restrictive case of kanénas is usually kanenôs (masc. and neut.), kamyâs (fem.)

(b) MEANINGS. In the remainder of this Comment and in the first Comment of the next Unit we shall take up the use of various limiting words. In any language such words are difficult to master, and we present this part not as something you can learn all at once, but rather as a place to which you can refer for the use of such limiting words as you will need to look up. The order of treatment is from 'none' through 'some' to 'a good many'.

There is one statement that applies to all pronouns, the same statement that you have already met in the comment on ópyos in Unit 16: whenever a pronoun is used for a reference to a person about whom nothing particular is known (so that, for example, the person might be either a man or a woman), it is the masculine that must be used. Thus, as ópyos (not ópya or ópyo) is the vague, general word for 'whoever', so kathénas (not kathemyá or kathéna) is the general word for 'each (person); each one', etc. Also, when reference is made to a thing about which nothing particular is known, it is the neuter that must be used (e.g. aftó 'this; that', óla 'all; everything'). Sometimes, however, this reference to general things is expressed not by the neuter of the three-gender pronoun but by a special neuter pronoun, as óti (not ópyo) must be used for 'whatever'. These are the correspondences of this sort:

General pronoun for persons			General pronoun for things
pyós	'who?'	:	tí	'what?'
ópyos	'whoever'	:	óti	'whatever'
kanénas dhén	'no one'	:	típota dhén	'nothing'
kanénas	'anyone'	:	típota	'anything'
kápyos	'someone'	:	káti	'something'
kathénas	'each one; every one'	:	káthe-tí	'each thing; every thing'

(1a) kanénas (kamyá, kanéna) dhén; dhén . . . kanénas (kamyá, kanéna) 'no one; not any; no'. This section is mostly review, since you studied this combination in Unit 7 in the meaning 'nobody; no one'.

kanénaz-dhen-áfine-to-fortáki na-perási. Nobody would let the Ford through.

ekhum-athlités pu-dhén-dus-pernái-kanéna-s-to-tréksimo. We have athletes that are way ahead of anybody ('that nobody outstrips') in running.

dhén-gzéro-kanéna-ráfti-edho-kondá. I don't know of any tailor near here. (or I know of no tailor near here.)

dhén-afínune-kanéna-álo-aftoktnito-na-perási. They won't let any other car pass.

In all these sentences the forms of kanénas are strongly accented. The meaning of this combination when it does not go with any noun is 'nobody; no one; not one'; when it goes with a noun it means 'not any; no'.

(1b) kanénas, kamyá, kanéna 'anyone; someone; a person; any; some'.

ena-paghotó i-kanena-ghlikó an ice cream or some kind of pastry min-gzérete-kamya-kalí-tavérna? Do you happen to know any good tavern?

kséretе-kanenan-guréa pu-kóvi-kalá-ta-malyá? Do you know any barber that gives a good haircut?

tí-borí-na-dhí-kanena-s-tin-athína? What can a person see in Athens?

edhó móno-otan-in-árostos-kanenas pái-s-to-farmakío. Here a person only goes to a drugstore when he's sick.

se-tútin-din-davérna trói-kanenas-kalá. At this tavern you can get good food ('anyone eats well').

írthe-kanénas? Has anyone come?

What may be called the affirmative kanénas (not forming a combination with dhén) is unaccented when it is used as an adjective, as in the first three examples. When used as a pronoun it may or may not be accented, according to its position in the sentence; it is most likely to be stressed if it comes at the end. Another characteristic of the affirmative kanénas is that it practically never stands as the first word in a sentence. Furthermore, this kanénas (if compared to kápyos) is rather indefinite: as a pronoun it means 'anybody; anyone; somebody; someone; a person'; as an adjective it means 'any; any kind of; some; some kind of'.

(2) kápyos, -a, -o 'a certain person; somebody; someone; a certain; some'. First consider this pair of sentences:

éfiye-kanénas? Has anyone left?

né, éfiye-kápyos to-proí. Yes, someone left this morning.

You see that kápyos has more definiteness about it than kanénas.

Next take these instances of kápyos that you have already met:

kápyoz-mu-éghrapse.	Somebody wrote to me.
ine-ke-kápyi pu-léne pos . . .	There are also certain people who say that . . .
kápya-kirta-mú-pe pos . . .	Some woman told me that . . .
pézune-kápya-tenta-tu-tárzan.	They're playing some Tarzan picture.

The person who uses kápyos speaks as one who is fairly confident of being able to give an identification, though he may not know the name of the person or thing in question; he may even know the name but may not care to mention it.

(3a) típota dhén; dhén . . . típota 'not anything; not a thing; nothing; not any; no'. This section is partly review, since you studied this combination in the meaning 'not anything; nothing' in Unit 7.

aftó-dhen-ine-típota.	That's nothing.
dhén-du-stamatái-típota.	Nothing can stop ('stops') them.
óchi, dhen-ikhane-típota-psomí.	No, they didn't have any bread.
típota-ghrámata-símera!	No letters today!

In all these sentences the word típota is strongly accented. If you compare the last two examples here with the last two examples in Section (1a) on kanénas dhén, you will see that both kanénas dhén and típota dhén when they go with a noun mean 'not any; no'. The difference is that kanénas (containing énas 'one') is used only with a noun that stands for an individual person or thing, while típota is used with a noun that is collective (like psomí 'bread') or plural (like ghrámata 'letters').

(3b) típota 'anything; something; any; some'.

álo-típota?	Anything else? (or Something else?)
min-échete-típota-pyó-flinó?	Do you happen to have anything cheaper?
tkhane-tipota-psomí?	Did they have any bread?
min-trthane-tipota-ghrámata?	Can you tell me whether any letters came? ('By any chance did any letters come?')

What we may call the affirmative típota (not forming a combination with dhén) is usually accented when it is used as a pronoun. When used as an adjective, as in the last two examples, it is unaccented. This tipota (if compared to kâti) is rather indefinite. As a pronoun it means 'anything; something'. As an adjective, occurring only before collective or plural nouns, it means 'any; any kind of; some; some kind of'.

(4) kâti 'something; some'. First consider this pair of sentences:

vrîkes-tîpota?	Have you found anything?
nê, pistévo pos-kâti-vrîka.	Yes, I believe I've found something.

From this you can see that kâti has more definiteness than tîpota.

Here are some further examples:

tha-saz-dhîkso-kâti.	I'll show you something.
élegha-pos-kâti-tha-mu-érthi.	I thought I'd go crazy ('that something will come upon me').
nê, tkhane-kati-psomí.	Yes, they had some bread.
nê, trthane-kati-ghrâmata.	Yes, some letters did come.

When used as a pronoun kâti means 'something' and is accented. When used as an adjective, occurring only before collective or plural nouns, it means 'some; some kind of' and is generally unaccented.

(5a) lîghos, lîyi, lîgho 'little; very little'; plur. lîyi, lîyes, lígha 'few; very few'.

móno-lígha-ksenodhochía ekhune-dhomátia-me-bányo.	Only very few (or Only a few) hotels have rooms with bath.
to-dhomatió-mu echi-lígha-épipla.	My room has little furniture ('few pieces of furniture').

Note the stress that always characterizes lîghos in the meaning illustrated here.

(5b) lîghos, etc. 'a little'; plur. lîyi, etc. 'a few'.

echi-ligho-aéra.	It's a little windy. ('There is a little wind.')
vrîkame-liyi-bendzína mésa-s-enan-deneké.	We found a little gasoline in a can.
kséro-ligha-italikâ.	I know a little Italian.

se-lígho	in a little while (or soon)
milíi-italikâ?—né, lígha.	Do you speak Italian?—Yes, a little.

As you see, when líghos has the meaning 'a little', rather than '(very) little', there are two possibilities as to accent: as a pronoun it is accented (e.g. se-lígho and né, lígha cited above); as an adjective it is unaccented.

(5c) lighâki 'a little'.

trós-psomí?—né, lighâki.	Will you have ('Do you eat') some bread?—Yes, a little.
ekhume-móno-lighâk-ighrasía.	We have only a little humidity.

The word lighâki may be used as a pronoun or as an adjective. In contrast to líghos (which, like practically any adjective, agrees in gender with the noun it goes with), it is unchangeable no matter what the gender of the following noun may be.

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all the English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You discuss with a Greek the difference between post offices in Greece and in America: in Greece you have to go to the post office to send a telegram; in most places post office, telephone, and telegraph office are all together in one building.
2. A Greek peasant woman sends a letter to her son in America. She asks the teacher of the village to write it. Sends news from home, thanks for the money-order her son has sent to her, asks for some clothes, etc. Asks the teacher to write the address, too.
3. An old couple open a package which has just arrived and are sampling the contents. They find some shirts, two pairs of shoes, a suit, and cloth for a coat.
4. You stop at the post office: you buy stamps; you send a telegram; you phone; you ask whether there is a package or any printed matter for you.
5. You ask a friend what the Kladases' address is. He tells you, and asks why you want to know. You say you're writing to John Kladas, because he's sick. Then you ask your friend where he's going. He says he's

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

(6) merikí, -és, -á 'part of them; some'.

merikí-léne pos-ine-to-ethnikó-tus-théatro. áli-páli-léne pos-protimúne-ton-ginimatóghrafo.	Some say it's their national drama. Then again others say they like the movies better.
merikí dhén-ekhune-dhulyá. áli ine-dháskali-i-fitités.	Part of them don't have any work. Others are teachers or students.
merikí ine-polí-polí-palyá.	Some [of the boats] are very, very old.
borite-na-mu-dhósete-merikés-plirofories?	Can you give me some information?

This word, as you observe, has plural forms only. The word merikí is often balanced in the same sentence by áli 'others'.

(7) kámbosos, -i, -o 'quite a; considerable; some'; plur. kámbosi, -es, -a 'quite a few; several'.

stekótane-kámbosos-kózmo-s-to-dhrómo.	Quite a crowd was standing in the street.
kámbosi-óra	for some time
s-tin-athlitikí-mu-omádha kséro-kámbosa-pedhyá pu . . .	On my athletic team I know several fellows that . . .
émina-k-eghó kámbosuz-míne-s-tin-eládha.	I stayed several months in Greece, too.

The word kámbosos expresses the notion of fairly large size or number.

(8a) óli, -es, -a 'all; everyone'.

óli-edho	everybody here
óli-mas	all of us (or we all) óli-sas	all of you (or you all)

When a whole group is referred to, this is the pronoun that is used, and of course the masculine form is employed for persons spoken of in general.

(8b) óla 'all; everything'.

ta-kafenía-mas khrisimévune-ya-óla.	Our coffee-shops serve every purpose ('serve for everything').
póso-kánune-óla-mazí?	How much does it all come to? ('How much do all things make together?')
mím-bistévet-óla-ósa-saz-léne.	Don't believe everything ('all things that') people tell you.

These examples show how the neuter plural of ólos is used for a total of things spoken of in general.

(9a) káthe 'each; every'.

ine-éna-bányo se-káthe-pátoma.	There's one bathroom on each floor.
káthe-mikró-pedhí-s-tin-eládha kséri-ton-garagyózi.	Every small boy in Greece knows the Karaguez play.
káthe-khróno	every year
káthe-tésera-khrónya	every four years
káthe-forá-pu-erkhómaste-s-tu-barba-yáni	every time we come to "Uncle" John's
káthe-pu-béni	every time he comes in

You see that káthe is unchangeable in form and that it is an adjective only. Since káthe regularly stands before a noun or pronoun in the singular, such a phrase as káthe-tésera-khrónya is striking, but here tésera-khrónya is evidently the equivalent of 'four-year period'. As for the combination káthe-pu 'every time (that)' in the last example above, it can only be understood as short for káthe-forá-pu.

(9b) kathénas, kathemyá, kathéna 'each one; every one'.

píre-o-kathéna-sas oti-tche-mazí-tu?	Have you got your things, both of you? ('Has each of you taken what he had with him?')
léi-káti-politikâ-asíta pu-dhén-da-katalevéni-o-kathénas.	He tells some political jokes that not everybody can get.

From these examples you see that corresponding to the adjective káthe 'each; every' there is a pronoun kathénas 'each one; every one', containing énas 'one'. But there are four forms of the pronoun kathénas that do not match with those of the pronoun énas:

	masc.	fem.	neut.
obj. case	kathéna
rest. case	kathenós	kathemyás	kathenós

The use of the definite article before kathénas, as in the above examples, is entirely optional. If you compare óli to kathénas, you will see that the former emphasizes the group and the latter the individual in it.

(10) álos, -i, -o 'other; another; else'. First consider these examples from the material you have gone through:

ton-álo-dhrómo	the other road
apo-tin-áli-meryá	on the other side
dhyó-tría-ála-pedhyá	two or three other young fellows
ekhun-erghostásia ke-se-ála-méri-tis-eládhas.	They have factories in other parts of Greece, too.
tí-alo-thélete?	What else do you want?
óti-álo-thélete	whatever else you want
álo-típota?	Anything else?
pú-ta-válame tin-áli-forá?	Where did we put them (the) last time?
tin-áli-méra	the next day
. . . ky-ález-dhéka-práksis-na-dhúme.	. . . And another ten (or ten more) acts [still] to see.

The phrases and sentences above show álos as the Greek equivalent of our word 'other' (or 'else' after a pronoun), although in some situations, as in the last three examples, we may find it more suitable to translate it with different words ('last', 'next', 'more', etc.).

Next, observe well the various ways that álos is used in combination either with a different pronoun (or adjective) or with another form of itself within one and the same sentence or closely connected sentences:

thélo-o-énas na-mu-kalhartsi-ta-áspra-mu-papútsya ky-o-álos na-mu-yaltsi-ta-mávra.	I want the one to clean my white shoes for me and the other to shine my black ones.
tus-káni ke-skotóni-o-énas-ton-álone.	He gets them to kill each other (or one another).
echete-myá-karékla kondá-s-to-kreváti, ke-mya-áli ya-to-trapézi. ky-áli-tríti s-to-bányo.	You have one chair by the bed, and another for the table. And a third in the bathroom.
álo-kapélo-fortí-to-chimóna ky-álo-to-kalokéri.	He wears one hat in winter and another in summer.
merikí-léne pos . . . áli-páli-léne pos . . .	Some say that . . . Then again others say that . . .
áli-dhulévune-se-khtímata, áli s-erghostásia.	Some work on farms, others in factories.

Finally, here are examples to show the use of álos and enas-álos when they occur outside of the combinations just illustrated above.

ist-ap-tim-bátra í-apo-álo-méros-tis-eládhas?	Are you from Patras or from another part of Greece?
óti-dhulyá-ékhune tin-aftnune-kaltera-ya-áli-méra.	Whatever work they have they would rather leave for another day.
ine-dhikó-sas-to-panofóri?—óchi, alunú.	Is this coat yours?—No, it's somebody else's ('of another person').
échi-álo-tréno ya-ti-salonîki?	Is there another (or any other) train to Salonica?
dhén-ekho-álo-kalítero s-ólo-to-ksenodhochío.	I haven't another (or any other) better in the whole hotel.
dhén-ekho-s-áli-timí.	I haven't [a thing] at any other price.

enas-álos-mu-fílos ine-ipálilo-se-ghrafío.	Another friend of mine is an employee in an office.
thimíthika-ena-álo-takstídhi pu-ékama-me-t-aftokínito.	I [just] remembered another ride I took ('that I made') in a car.

Greek usually has álos where we use 'another' (or 'any other' in questions or with a negative). But there are also situations in which Greek has enas-álos for 'another'. The difference is that enas-álos is somewhat more definite than álos alone. This is really a question of the use of the indefinite article, on which you will find some hints in the Word Study of Unit 15.

(11a) o-tídhyos, i-tídhya, to-tídhyo 'the same; the same one'.

s-to-tídhyo-vaghóni	in the same car ('railroad car')
pánda-to-tídhyo.	[It's] always the same stuff.
páli-ta-tídhya.	There they go again. ('Again the same things.') ky-o-patéra-sas ta-tídhya-léi-ky-aftós san-g-emás.	Even your father says the same thing as we [have.]

The combination o-tídhyos 'the same' serves either as an adjective or as a pronoun. When used as an adjective it stands before its noun.

(11b) o-tídhyos-o . . . (o . . . o-tídhyos) 'himself'.

in-o-tídhyos-o-karagyózis.	That's Karaguez himself.
i-mitéra-mu-i-tídhya mu-tó-pe.	My mother herself told me (it).
estís-o-tídhyos dhen-gatalavénete-típota.	You yourself don't understand a thing.

When it is used with a noun, whether tídhyos comes before or after, both tídhyos and the noun have the definite article; when it is used with a pronoun, only tídhyos has the article.

According to the word it intensifies, tídhyos in these combinations means 'myself', 'yourself', 'himself', etc.

(12a) mónos, -i, -o 'only; sole; alone'.

to-móno-práma-pu-thélo	the only thing I want

i-móni-ma-sotirta-vlépo in-o-pétros.	Our only hope now ('I see') is Peter.
aftós in-o-mónos-pu-borí-na-mas-to-pí.	He's the only one that can tell us (it).
itane-me-sindrofyá?—óchi, tone-vríka-mónone.	Was he with a group?—No, I found him alone.
tóra pu-imaste-móni-i-dhyó-mas	now that the two of us are alone

When preceded by the definite article, the word mónos means 'only; sole'; when not preceded by the article, it means 'alone'.

(12b) mónoz-mu, móni-mu, etc. 'by myself'.

aftste-me-na-to-vró-mónoz-mu.	Let me find it myself.
dhem-bígha-poté-mónoz-mu.	I never went alone.
ksurízete-mónos-tu.	He shaves himself. ('He gets shaved by himself.')

When 'myself' means 'by myself; all by myself', Greek uses mónoz-mu (whereas when 'myself' means 'in person; personally' Greek uses eghó-o-tídhyos).

COMMENT 2

THE COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

(a) FORMS OF THE COMPARATIVE. Consider the forms of the descriptive adjectives in these sentences:

aftós-o-dhrómos ine-pyó-oréos.	This road is more beautiful.
ise-tría-khrónya-mikróteros-ap-to-yáni.	You're three years younger than John.

In English, when an adjective is preceded by the word 'more' (as in 'more beautiful'), or has the ending -er added (as in 'younger'), it is said to be in the comparative degree. From the examples given above, you see that Greek can make the comparative in both of these ways, with pyó corresponding to our word 'more', and the ending -teros corresponding to our ending -er. Any adjective at all may be compared by the use of pyó before it. On the other hand, the formation with -teros, though possible for most adjectives, is not found in the following: unchangeable adjectives like blé 'blue'; certain of the longer adjectives, e.g. kenúryos 'new', perterghos 'curious', vrómikos 'dirty', árostos 'sick' (and even an occasional one of the shorter adjectives, e.g. krýos 'cold'); adjective-like nouns such as tembélis 'loafer; lazy fellow' (pyó-tembélis 'more of a loafer; lazier'). Where an adjective possesses both comparatives, as most of them do (e.g. pyó-mikrós and mikróteros), the speaker's choice seems to depend on factors like the rhythm of the phrase.

For the method of forming comparatives with -teros, look at these examples:

Adjectives in -os			Adjectives in -is plúsyos	:	plusyóteros 'richer'	valhís	:	valhíteros 'deeper'
nóstimos	:	nostimóteros 'prettier'	platís	:	platíteros 'broader'
lígos	:	ligóteros 'less'	varís	:	varíteros 'heavier'
katharós	:	katharóteros 'cleaner'	makrís	:	makríteros 'longer'

Adjectives in -os have -óteros in the comparative; those in -is have -íteros. This is the general rule. Among the adjectives you have had so far the following are exceptions:

kalós	:	kalíteros 'better'
meghálos	:	meghalíteros 'bigger; older'

Original from THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

kondós	:	kondíteros 'nearer; shorter'
áspros	:	aspríteros 'whiter'
mávros	:	mavríteros 'blacker; darker'

As you see, there are a few adjectives in -os which are peculiar in forming their comparatives in -íteros. Hereafter, whenever a new adjective of this sort occurs in the Basic Sentences, its comparative in -íteros will be given in the Finder List.

Finally, there are two adjectives whose comparatives in -teros are made on a different stem from that of the simple adjectives:

polís	:	perisóteros 'more'
kakós	:	chiróteros 'worse'

(b) THE COMPARATIVE PHRASE. Up to this point in the Comment you have studied only the forms of the comparative adjective. But now let's look at the words that often accompany the comparative in what we may call the comparative phrase.

(1) The comparative without definite article.

dhen-ídha-poté-mu oreótero ke-pyó-kaló-korítsi ap-tin-eléni.	I've never in my life seen a prettier or ('and') a nicer girl than Helen.
ine-psilóteri-apo-más.	They're taller than we.
ise-mikróteros-apo-ména.	You're younger than I.
ke-na-skéftome pos-ise-tría-khrónya-mikroteróz-mu!	(And) to think that you're three years younger than I!
aftós ine-pyó-plúsyos ap-ol-imast-emís.	He's richer than we are.

In all the above examples there is a real comparison made, whether of one individual (person or thing) with another, or of an individual with a group, or of one group with another. And in all of them you will observe that where the word apo appears, it means 'than'. Note that where we have 'than' plus a personal pronoun (as in the second, third, and fourth examples), Greek may either use apo with an accented personal pronoun (e.g. mikróteros-apo-ména), or may simply use the restrictive case of an unaccented pronoun (e.g. mikroteróz-mu or pyó-mikróz-mu). Where apo 'than' is followed by a clause (as in the last example), the clause is introduced by oti.

(2) The comparative with the definite article.

i-mikróteri-ap-tiz-dhío ine-léi-polí-nóstimi.	The younger of the two is very pretty, they say.
ap-tus-fílus-pu-kha-s-tin-eládha o-yórghos-itan-o-kalíteros.	Of the friends I had in Greece George was the best.
itan-o-kalíteros-ap-aftús.	He was the best of them.
óli-tus ine-kalí, ma-o-kaliterós-tus in-o-yánis.	They're all good, but the best of them is John.
in-o-pyó-plúsyos ap-óluz-mas.	He's the richest one of us all ('of all of us').
ine-ta-kalíter-aftokínita pu-ékhume.	They're the best cars we have.
i-athína in-i-meghalíteri-póli tis-eládhas.	Athens is the largest city in ('of') Greece.
i-perisoterí-sas	most of you

In all the above examples there is a selection made, whether of an individual (person or thing) from a group, or of a smaller group from a larger one (as in the last example). And in all of them you will observe that where the word apo appears, it means 'of'. If you take a comparative like mikróteri (feminine singular) 'younger' and prefix to it the definite article, you find that the combination i-mikróteri can mean either 'the younger (of two)' or 'the youngest (of three or more)'; likewise o-pyó-plúsyos means, according to the situation, 'the richer' or 'the richest', etc. In other words, Greek does not have the distinction in form that we have in English between comparative and superlative. Where we fill out the phrase of selection with 'of' ('the younger of', 'the youngest of'), Greek uses the same two types of expression as it does in a phrase of comparison: apo with a noun or pronoun, or, instead of apo with an accented personal pronoun (e.g. o-kalíteros-ap-aftús), the restrictive case of an unaccented personal pronoun (e.g. o-kaliterós-tus). In this connection notice the Greek expression of place in phrases like i-meghalíteri-póli tis-eládhas, for which the English is 'the largest city in Greece' (rather than 'of Greece').

From phrases like o-kaliterós-tus 'the best of them; the best among them' one must distinguish sharply the similar, but only apparently similar, phrase in such a sentence as óso-ya-kiníyi piyénete-na-vríte-ton-galiteró-mas "As for hunting, try and ('go to') find anyone to equal us ('anyone better than we')." Here the adjective clearly expresses comparison, not selection, and yet the definite article is used. The peculiar thing is that in this phrase the article is not really definite ('the'), but has a general meaning ('any'). What we have in o-kaliterós-mas is a set phrase, with which we may compare the following similar expressions: o-dhinatoterós-mas 'our master', o-eksipnoterós-su 'a person smarter than you', o-kutoterós-su 'a person more stupid than you', o-yerondoterós-tus 'their elder', o-mikroterós-mu 'a person younger than I; my junior'.

(c) THE COMPARATIVE OF EQUALITY ('AS . . . AS').

dhén-ine-tóso-nóstimi óso-in-i-eléni.	She isn't as pretty as Helen is.
to-kapélo-mu dhén-ine-tóso-kenúryo óso-to-dhikó-su.	My hat isn't as new as yours.
ine-tóso-kalí san-di-fróso?	Is she as nice as Phroso?
dhé-léo pos-ine-plúsyo-san-g-eséna.	I don't claim that he's as rich as you.
óso-perisótera-ékho tóso-perisótera-ksodhévo.	The more I have, the more I spend.

Where we have 'as . . . as' (or 'so . . . as') plus a clause (as in the first example above), Greek uses tóso . . . óso. (The words tóso and óso may stand with no word between them, as in the sentence dhén-ine-tóso óso-in-o-pétros "He's not as much so as Peter.") Where we in English drop the verb from the clause and thus reduce the comparison to 'as . . . as' plus a noun or pronoun, Greek uses tóso óso, tóso san, or, most frequently of all, simply san after the adjective (e.g. ine-plúsyo-san-g-eséna "He's as rich as you."). The last sentence above means literally "I spend more to that extent (tóso) to which (óso) I have more," but following the order in which the words actually run in this and similar sentences we may say that óso . . . tóso corresponds to our 'the . . . the . . .'.

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all the English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You explain to a friend the Greek monetary system: one dollar is about 150 drachmas; the drachma contains 100 lepta; a five-lepta piece isn't worth a thing. You generally pay for things with paper money. You find bills for 25, 50, 100, 500, 1000, and 5000 drachmas.
2. A friend of yours wants to get some money changed: calculate how many drachmas x dollars and x cents are, and how many dollars x drachmas are.
3. You arrive in a Greek town. You ask where you can get money changed. You go to the bank. You go up to the cashier and cash a check. You ask what the rate on the dollar is. You want to speak to the director.
4. Invent a dialogue between two friends: Can you lend me fifty drachmas? I want to go to the dance. I haven't gotten my pay yet. — How would I have that much? I'm broke too. I'd like to go to the dance, too. What are we to do? etc.
5. What men like to spend their money on: books, trips, cars, dinners, drinks, movies, girls; what women like to spend their money on: clothes, hats, shoes, cigarettes, pastry, coffee, shows; what all the money we get on the first of the month actually goes for: house, light, telephone, water, food, the doctor, and bills, bills, bills.

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

Adverbs.

(a) Use. Look at the following sentences, directing your attention to the part played in them by the words set at the left margin:

1. mésa	perâste-mésa!	Step [right] in!
2. khtés	to-tachidhromío-ya-tin-ítalía éfiye-khtés.	The mail for Italy went out yesterday.
3. pós	pós-to-kséret-ests-aftó?	How do you know that?
kalá	óla-ósa-kánun-aftí ine-kalá-kamoména.	Everything they do is well done.
4. étsi	k-étsi níkyasa-en-aftoktnito.	(And) so (or for that reason) I hired a car.
5. tóte	tóte párte-túta.	Then (or In that case) take these.
6. pyó	aftós-o-dhrómos ine-pyó-oréos.	This road is more beautiful.
	elpízo-ávrio na-kimilhís-pyó-kalá.	I hope that tomorrow you'll sleep better.
dhén	dhén-da-forúne-álo.	They're not wearing them any more.

The words we are concerned with here in the examples are called adverbs. The ones cited represent the chief kinds of adverbs that there are in Greek, those of (1) place, (2) time, (3) manner, (4) cause, (5) circumstance, and (6) degree. An adverb is an individual word, unchangeable in form, which is normally used with a verb (e.g. perâste-mésa and most of the other cases above), an adjective (e.g. pyó-oréos), or another adverb (e.g. pyó-kalá), to define more closely the word it is used with. Naturally, the extreme of such a process of limiting in the field of quantity is produced by the use of dhén (or mín), which is at the bottom of the scale: ta-forúne-polí "They're wearing them a good deal," ta-forúne-lígho "They're wearing them very little," dhén-da-forúne "They're not wearing them."

(b) FORMS.

(1) ADVERBS FROM ADJECTIVES.

kalós	'good'	:	kalá	'well'	vathís	'deep'	:	vathyá	'deep(ly)' kakós	'bad'	:	kaká	'badly'	varís	'heavy'	:	varyá	'heavily'
kondós	'short'	:	kondá	'nearby'	makrís	'long'	:	makriá	'far'
psilós	'high; tall'	:	psilá	'high up'	platís	'wide'	:	platyá	'wide(ly)' prótos	'first'	:	próta	'first'	dheksís	'right'	:	dheksyá	'to the right' éfkolos	'easy'	:	éfkola	'easily'
elinikós	'Greek'	:	elinikά	'in Greek'

As you see, the adverbs here all have the form of the neuter plural (object case) of the corresponding adjective. This is the regular way to make adverbs out of adjectives in Greek (just as our regular way in English is to add -ly to an adjective — 'bad': 'badly', 'second': 'secondly', 'decided': 'decidedly', etc.).

Furthermore, there is an adverbial ending -os (as in pós 'how?'). Some examples are:

amésos	'immediately'	aeroporikós	'by air; by airmail'
efkharístos	'gladly'	tilefonikós	'by telephone'
akrivós	'exactly'	tachidhromikós	'by mail'
eftikhós	'fortunately'
dhistikhós	'unfortunately'

Often adverbs with this ending have no corresponding adjectives beside them in the colloquial language; this is the case with the five adverbs in the left-hand column above. The numbers of the adverbs in -os are constantly increased by the adoption of further ones, usually of a scientific or commercial application, from the learned language, in which they are formed from adjectives in -os (or sometimes -is). Examples of this latter type are given in the right-hand column.

(2) ISOLATED ADVERBS. Some adverbs have never had any corresponding adjectives. These isolated adverbs show a great variety of endings. Most of them must simply be learned by heart, but it may be of some help to you to study a few of them by groups.

Place		Ending: -u		Time
Ending: -o		pú	'where?'	Ending: -ote
páno	'up'	kápu	'somewhere'	póte	'when?'
káto	'down'	alú	'elsewhere'	kápote	'sometimes'
píso	'back'			poté	'ever'
ékso	'out'			(dhén . . . poté	'never')
edhó	'here'			tóte	'then'

(3) THE COMPARISON OF ADVERBS.

1. Forms of the comparative.

Adverb		Comparative adverb
oréa	'beautifully'	pyó-oréa	'more beautifully'
vathyá	'deeply'	pyó-vathyá	'more deeply'
kalá	'well'	pyó-kalá	'better'
ghlíghora	'quickly'	pyó-ghlíghora	'more quickly'
páno	'up'	pyó-páno	'higher up'
káto	'down'	pyó-káto	'lower down'
píso	'back'	pyó-píso	'farther back'

From these examples you can see that any adverb which in the nature of things can be compared may form its comparative by the use of the word pyó before it.

Comparative adjective		Comparative adverb
oreóteros	'more beautiful'	orcótera	'more beautifully'
valhíteros	'deeper'	valhítera	'more deeply'
kalíteros	'better'	kalítera	'better'
ghlighoróteros	'quicker'	ghlighorótera	'more quickly'

The neuter plural of comparative adjectives in -teros serves as a comparative adverb, just as with other adjectives in -os.

2. The comparative phrase.

The comparative without definite article.

o-yánis tréchi-ghlighoróteras-apo-ména.
o-yánis tréchi-ghlighoroterá-mu. } John runs faster than I.

o-yánis tréchi-pyó-ghlíghora-apo-más-tus-trís. John runs faster than the three of us.

The comparative with the definite article.

to-ghlighoróteros-apo-más-tus-trís tréchi-o-yánis. John runs the fastest of us three.

eláte-to-arghóteros-s-tis-éksi. Come at six at the latest.

As you see, adverbs are compared just like adjectives: if there is a real comparison, no article is used and apo means 'than'; if there is a selection, the neuter article to is used before the adverb, and apo (when it appears) means 'of'. After this article to the comparative ending -tera is frequently replaced by the ending -tero.

The comparative with para.

kaltera-ekho-na-pethánо para-na-zó-tétya-zoí. I'd rather die than lead ('live') such a life.

kaltera-ekho-na-pethánо para-na-zó-khoris-aftóne. I'd rather die than live without him.

i-perisoteri-sas. kátheste-kaltera-dhéka-óre-s-to-kafentо para-dhyó-leftá s-ton-gatharó-aéra. Most of you would rather sit any number of hours in the coffee-shop than two minutes in the open air.

kalítera-spíti-k-isichía para-théatra-ke-kakά. Better [for a man to have] home and peace than the uproar of the theater ('shows and uproars').

You see that para 'than' is used if there is a comparison between two clauses. Often in one or both of these clauses the conjunction and verb are understood, as shown in the last two examples.

(4) ADVERBIAL PHRASES. A great many concepts of place, time, etc. are expressed in Greek not by separate adverbs but by various combinations of words. Characteristic examples are:

edho-kondά	'near here'	me-tin-isichía-mu	'at my leisure'
pάno-káto	'more or less; about'	myά-forά-ya-pánda	'once and for all'
akóma-tóra	'even now; to this day; still'	me-ta-pódhya	'on foot'
apo-dhó	'this way; on this side'	ap-to-chéri	'by the hand'
se-mya-meryά	'at one side'	s-ti-sirά	'in a row'
mé-s-ti-mési	'right in the middle'	edhó-ke . . . (object case)	'. . . ago'
se-lígho	'in a little while; soon'

These expressions include combinations of two adverbs, prepositional phrases, and miscellaneous combinations of elements.

(c) LISTS OF ADVERBS AND ADVERBIAL PHRASES. The following lists may be helpful to you by way of review of the adverb material you have covered in the Units so far. It has seemed best to divide the adverbs into four types, those of place, time, manner (including cause and circumstance), and degree. The lines between these groups are not hard and fast, and in any case it is not uncommon for an adverb to be found in more than one group.

COMMENT 2

ACCENTED PERSONAL PRONOUNS IN THE RESTRICTIVE CASE. With the restrictive forms of the unaccented personal pronouns (mu, sas, etc.) you are thoroughly familiar by this time; you learned in Unit 4 about their use as possessives, and in Unit 10 about their use as indirect objects. The corresponding forms of the accented third person pronoun, aftunú (masculine and neuter) and aftiní (feminine), have already been treated in the Comment on the limiting words, in Unit 19. Now here are examples of the restrictive forms of the accented pronouns of the first and second persons:

First person

'my' to-spíti-mu-eména bort-ná-ne-palyó ma-ine-pyó-meghálo-ap-to-dhikó-su. My house may be old, but it's bigger than yours.

'(to) me' eména-m-arés-i-tavérna-tu-barba-yáni. I like "Uncle" John's tavern. ('To me "Uncle" John's tavern is pleasing.')

'our' ta-korítsya-mas-emás dhén-ine-san-da-dhiká-sas. Our girls are not like yours.

'(to) us' emáz-mas-éghrapse pos-in-árostos. He wrote us that he was ('is') sick.

Second person

(a) Familiar singular

'your' k-eséna t-arkhondopuló-su tí-káni? And how's the ('your') young master doing?

'(to) you' k-emís ikhame-na-su-zitísum-eséna-leftá! We (for our part) were just going to ask you for some money!

(b) Familiar plural; polite singular and plural

'your' i-stratyóte-sas-esás ine-léi-prótis-tákseos. Your soldiers are crack troops ('first-rate'), they say.

'(to) you' sa-stílane-esás-típota? Did they send you anything?

Notice how the accented personal pronouns are accompanied in the examples above by "extra" unaccented pronouns which either anticipate (e.g. sa-stílane-esás) or repeat (e.g. eména-m-arési) the emphatic pronouns. This is part of a process the workings of which you have already studied in Unit 16, Comment 2. The unaccented pronouns are very seldom omitted when the accented pronouns stand in the restrictive case.

Here is a summary of all the stressed forms of the personal pronouns that you will need:

	1.	2.		3.
		fam.	pol.	masc.	fem.	neut.
s. subj.	eghó	esí	esís	aftós	aftí	aftó

COMMENT 3

MORE ABOUT THE INDIRECT OBJECT.

(a) NOUNS AS INDIRECT OBJECTS. The examples below show how nouns may be used (just as you have seen pronouns used) in the restrictive case as indirect objects:

pés-tiz-mitéras na-su-dhósi.	Tell ('Say to') Mother to give you [some money].
póso-myázi-tiz-manúla-sul	How much he looks like ('bears a resemblance to') your mother!
tha-fonákso-tu-thomá.	I'll call ('call to') Thomas.
ztíise-tu-patéra-leftá.	Ask Father for some money. ('Ask money of Father.')
tis-édhikses tis-pópis to-kenúryo-su-kapélo?	Have you shown Pope your new hat?

(b) THE INDIRECT OBJECT EXPRESSING INTEREST. Examples of indirect objects like mu or sas in the sentences dhóste-mu-kafé parakaló "Give me coffee, please" or na-saz-dhíkso "Let me show you," where the action of the verb is such that the sentence hardly seems complete without the indirect object, have already been treated sufficiently in Unit 10. But in certain sentences that you have had the indirect objects are of a rather different kind. As you look at these characteristic examples, observe how the indirect object is translated in the English equivalents.

tá-mathes-ta-néa? ti-skotósane tis-andónenas to-pedhí-tis.	Have you heard the news? Poor Antonena, they've killed her boy. ('They have killed her boy "on" Antonena.')
boró-eghó-na-sas-ta-pléno.	I can wash them for you.
mu-alázete-aftó-to-tsékí?	Will you cash this check for me?
kápyoz-mu-to-píre.	Somebody's taken it from me (or "on" me).

maz-lípune-dhyó-kutálya.	We're short two spoons. ('Two spoons are lacking to us.')
mas-éspas-ena-lástikho.	We've had a blow-out. ('A tire has blown "on" us.')
ná-ta-mas!	That's a good one on us! ('Behold them for us!') kópste-mu-ta-malyá parakaló.	Cut my hair, please. ('Cut the hair for me, please.')
morê-tha-tu-kópso-ti-míli!	Why, I'll bust him one ('cut off the nose for him')!
o-ráftiz-mas bort-na-sas-pári-métro-amésos.	Our tailor can take your measurements ('take measure for you') right away.

The indirect object may indicate the person for whose advantage or to whose disadvantage something is done or happens. Such an indirect object is very characteristic of Greek and may be used with almost any verb. Frequently, especially where parts of the body or possessions are concerned, Greek uses an indirect object for reference to the person affected by the action, where we find it most natural (as in the last three examples) to use a possessive in English.

(c) ALTERNATIVES TO THE INDIRECT OBJECT. Look at this pair of examples:

éstila-tu-ntku-to-ghráma.	I sent Nick the letter.
éstila-to-ghráma-s-to-ntko.	I sent the letter to Nick.

Just as we may say "I sent the letter to Nick" as well as "I sent Nick the letter," so speakers of Greek often use a preposition plus a noun or accented pronoun, instead of the noun or accented pronoun in the restrictive case. Further examples of the prepositional type are:

thélo-na-stílo-ena-ghráma s-to-pedhí-mu to-spíro.	I want to send a letter to my boy Spyros.
edhó óli-mas-parangélnume-ta-papútsya-mas s-ton-dzangári.	Here all of us order our shoes from ('to') the shoemaker.
ta-parangélnume-s-aftóne.	We order them from him.
yatí-dhe-mu-ztíse-eména-leftá ke-píye-ke-ztíise-ap-álone?	Why didn't he ask me for money instead of going and asking someone else ('and he went and asked from another')?

In the vast majority of cases the preposition used with the noun or accented pronoun as an alternative to the indirect object is se 'to'; only with a very small number of verbs, where the idea of separation comes in (notably pérno 'I take', zitó 'I ask for; I demand'), does the alternative phrase start with apo 'from'.

The restrictive plural is extremely rare in nouns, and is not very common in accented pronouns either. Instead of the restrictive plural, therefore, except for emás '(to) us' and esás '(to) you', you will find the se-phrase used. Look at the following examples:

dhóste-ta-khtímata-s-tus-yeorghús. Give the farms to the farmers.

dhóste-ta-s-aftús. Give them to them.

eghó-tu-tpa na-mín-do-pt-kanenós ky-aftós-ptye-ke-to-tpe-se-ólus. I told him not to tell it to anyone, and yet he went and told it to everyone.

If you use the phrase with se in place of a noun or accented pronoun in the restrictive case, you never use in addition an unaccented personal pronoun (mu, sas, etc.) in anticipation or repetition (see the preceding Comment in this Word Study).

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all the English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You go to a butcher shop and order meat: Steaks — they're too expensive. Brain — I don't eat it; it's too soft. Lamb — no lamb today. Tomorrow we'll have some in. All right, then. Save (keep) me a nice piece. You decide to see whether they happen to have any fish down at the market.
2. You talk to a fruit and vegetable man: You don't know the names of any of the fruits. You pick up different things, ask the man for the names of them, and then proceed to buy them or put them back in place.
3. At the bakery: You ask for white bread. The baker has black bread only. You ask whether you can taste a bit. It's a little hard. You ask whether there is a grocery store nearby. He gives you directions as to how to get to one.

4. You go with a friend to a grocery store: You buy sugar, soap, and chocolates. You ask for writing paper. Your friend is surprised. You explain to him that in small towns grocery stores sometimes sell paper, too. You ask the grocer whether the olives he has are good. He answers that they are first-class. Then you order three pounds of good-quality coffee. The grocer figures out the bill.

5. You discuss the food situation with a Greek: Before the war you could get everything you wanted, but after the war you couldn't find a thing; people were hungry, and little children died in the streets. Now it's a little better. But living is still very expensive.

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

Adverbial use of the object case. Nouns or limiting words in the object case may not only be direct objects of verbs (e.g. ékho-keró "I have time," trói-polí "He eats a lot.") or objects of prepositions (e.g. s-to-spíti 'to the house', se-lígho 'in a little while'); they may also function as adverbs. You will recall that in the Word Studies of Units 11 and 13 you learned about the use of the object case for expressions of time, whether to indicate point of time (e.g. tí-ora 'at what time?', to-prot 'in the morning', tin-giryakí '(on) Sunday') or duration (mya-stighmí '(for) a moment', óli-tin-óra 'all the time'). Very closely related are such instances as próti-forá '(for) the first time', tin-áli-forá '(the) last time', and myá-forá-ya-pánda 'once and for all'. In the first section of this Comment we shall illustrate the use of nouns in adverbial relationships other than that of time; in the second section we shall show the use of limiting words as adverbs. Some of the kinds of adverbial function that occur here have already been considered in Comment 1 of Unit 21 on adverbs proper.

(a) Nouns.

	dhen-aksízi-ton-gópo.	It's not worth while ('the effort').
Distribution:	prépi-na-pliróni-chílyez-dhrakhmés-to-mína.	He must be paying a thousand drachmas a month.
	pérno-ekató-dhrakhmés tin-iméra.	I get a hundred drachmas a day.
	pán-oghdhónda-chilyómetra-tin-óra.	They go eighty kilometers an hour.
	póso-kostízune?—dhyakósyez-dhrakhmés-to-pukámiso.	How much do they cost?—Two hundred drachmas each ('the shirt').
	dhóste-más-ta ya-ekaton-oghdhónda-dhrakhmés-to-éna.	Give them to us for a hundred and eighty drachmas apiece.
Manner:	eghó-s-tin-eládha páo-pánda-próti-thési.	I always go first class [here] in Greece.

(b) LIMITING WORDS. Most of the limiting words (see the Word Studies of Units 19 and 20), especially those of quantity, may be used in the object case of the neuter singular as adverbs. The adverbial relationships they express are mainly those of degree and of duration of time, although a few other uses are found, too.

COMMENT 2

CONDITIONS. A sentence like an-gitáksis tha-to-dhís "If you look, you'll see it" is known as a condition and contains two parts: an-gitáksis, the if-clause (introduced by an 'if'), and tha-to-dhís, the conclusion. In Greek there are two kinds of conditions, which we may call real and unreal.

(a) REAL CONDITIONS. This category has to do with facts, or what seem to be facts, of the present and the past, and with practical certainties, or at least strong probabilities, in the future — in other words, with situations that are all within the realm of reality.

1. Real conditions pertaining to the present or the past are very easy.

a-mu-lés-psémata kánis-áskima. If you're lying ('are telling lies') to me, you're doing wrong.
an-do-ékames kalá-êkames. If you did that, you did well.

Such conditions present no problem, because in the if-clause as well as in the conclusion the verb has the same form that it would have in an ordinary statement (e.g. mu-lés-psémata 'you're lying to me', kánis-áskima 'you're doing wrong').

2. Real conditions dealing with the future, that is, conditions in which the verb of the conclusion stands in the future, work a little differently and need to be studied with some care. Here are examples from the Basic Sentences of this Unit:

an-gáni-pánda-tu oti-théli-aftós dhe-tha-kaliterépsi-poté-tu. If he always does [just] what he wants [to], he'll never get better.
a-mu-pís-eména-na-kámo-ena-práma to-káno-amésos. If you tell me to do a thing, I'll do it right away.
an-do-pís-tu-leonídha tha-pái-na-kámi-to-andítheto. If you tell Leonidas to do something ('tell it to Leonidas'), he'll go and ('to') do the opposite.

There are two features of this kind of condition that deserve special notice: (1) in the if-clause Greek uses either the imperfective present (e.g. an-gáni-pánda-tu 'if he always does') or the perfective dependent (e.g. a-mu-pís 'if you tell me (once)') according to the type of action involved (action in progress or repeated, as opposed to single act); (2) in the conclusion Greek may use the imperfective present (e.g. to-káno-amésos 'I'll do it right away') in place of the perfective future (tha plus the perfective dependent), a substitution you learned about in Comment 2 of Unit 10.

Occasionally, of course, a condition is mixed as regards time, so that, for example, a future condition may have an if-clause referring to the past. That is the case in this sentence: a-dhén-do-píre dhé-tha-tu-perásun-i-póni "If he hasn't taken it (his medicine), the pain isn't going to go away ('the pains will not pass from him')."

(b) UNREAL CONDITIONS. In contrast to real conditions, which deal with facts or with vivid possibilities, the unreal ones present conceivable but remote possibilities or even situations that are contrary to actual fact. Examples from the Basic Sentences are:

an-aróstena-ghó dhe-thá-kana-típota-tu-kefalyú-mu. If I got (or should get, or were to get) sick, I wouldn't do anything on my own responsibility.

an-ikha-k-eghó-en-aghóri san-do-dhikó-su thá-muna-álos-áthropos. If I (too) had a boy like yours, I'd be a different woman.

an-done-piyénate-améso-s-to-nosokomío thá-tane-kalá-stímera. If you'd taken him to the hospital right away, he'd be well today.

a-dhen-ítane-o-yatrós-o-burbúlis thá-tane-pethaménos-tóra-o-leonídhas-mu. If it hadn't been for Dr. Bourboulis, (my) Leonidas would be a goner now.

As you see, in unreal conditions the verb of the if-clause always stands in the imperfective past, while the verb-form in the conclusion always consists of a combination of tha plus the imperfective past. (This combination, called the conditional, will be treated in the following Comment.) In having this invariable pattern the unreal conditions are remarkable in three respects: (1) Greek does not differentiate, as English does between conditions of remote possibility (like the first one in this set of examples) and conditions contrary to fact (like all the others in the set) — for Greek these are all unreal conditions; (2) there is no distinction of tense in either part of the condition (e.g. anarróstena could mean 'if I were getting sick' or 'if I had gotten sick', and thá-muna could mean 'I would be' or 'I would have been'); (3) there is no distinction as to type of action in either part of the condition (e.g. anarróstena could mean 'if I were getting sick' as well as 'if I should get sick', and thá-kana could mean 'I would be doing' as well as 'I would do').

COMMENT 3

How to say 'I'd come back', 'I'd do', 'I'd be', etc. The combination tha plus the imperfective past, which, as you have learned from the preceding Comment, stands in the conclusion of unreal conditions, is called the conditional. Here are some examples of this formation for all persons, singular and plural:

		'would come back'	'would do'	'would be'
sing.	1.	tha-yíriza	thá-kana	thá-muna
	2. familiar	tha-yírizes	thá-kanes	thá-suna
	polite	tha-yirízate	tha-kánate	thá-saste
	3.	tha-yírize	thá-kane	thá-tane

plur.	1.	tha-yirtzame	tha-káname	thá-maste
	2.	tha-yirtzate	tha-kánate	thá-saste
	3.	tha-yirtzane	tha-kánane	thá-tane

The word tha always goes closely with a following verb-form, although, of course, unaccented pronouns may come between. When that verb-form begins with a vowel, the vowel of tha often runs together with the initial vowel of the verb-form (just as in the combinations of tha with the imperfective present or the perfective dependent that serve as futures). Thus tha-ékana or tha-ímuna may, though they need not necessarily, be pronounced as thá-kana, thá-muna, respectively.

The conditional may, of course, be used outside of conditions; you have long been familiar with the phrase thá-thela 'I would like', as in thá-thela-na-kséro 'I'd like to know'.

Furthermore, it should be stated that the imperfective past of a few verbs, particularly thélo 'I want', boró 'I can', prépi 'it is necessary', may be used with the force of the conditional. Thus you may hear íthela-na-kséro as well as thá-thela-na-kséro for 'I'd like to know'. Here are two examples of this sort that have occurred in the present Unit:

éprepe-na-rkhósaste-protítera-edho-péra. You should have come ('It would be right for you to come') here sooner.

nómizes pos-káti-mésa-tu-ton-ékee. You would have thought something inside of him was burning him up.

In contrast to prépi-na with its idea of necessity ('must', 'have to', etc.), éprepe-na conveys the idea of desirability ('ought', 'should', etc.). Whether reference is made to the present ('should') or the past ('should have'), the form éprepe is the same. The form nómizes 'you would have thought' is peculiar in that it always refers to the past; Greek speakers use lés for 'you would think' referring to the present (e.g. lés-ke-káti-mésa-tu-tone-kéi "You'd think something inside of him was ('is') burning him up.").

Sometimes a verb-form that has no conditional force in Greek may be conveniently rendered as a conditional in English, but this is purely a matter of translation. Examples of this sort are:

COMMENT 4

THE PARTICIPLE IN -ménos.

(a) USE.

enas-adherfós-tu-patéra-mu ine-pandreménos me-mya-burbúli. One of my father's brothers is married to a Bourboulis.

óles-i-thésis ine-pyazménes. All the seats are taken.

to-stadhió-mas ine-kamoméno ólo-apo-mármaro. Our stadium's all made of marble.

min-itane-krioménos? Can it be that he had a cold ('was having-a-cold')?

thá-tane-pethaménos-tóra. He'd be dead now.

tí-boró-na-su-prosféro? — típota efkharistó, ime-faghoménos. What can I treat you to? — Nothing, thanks, I've just eaten ('I am having-eaten').

vríka-to-tirí faghoméno. I found the cheese [already] eaten.

itan-ena-fortáki m-ena-fteró-spazméno. It was a Ford with one fender broken.

borí-na-min-gzéri-ghrámata-o-níkos ma-ine-áthropos-taksidheméno. Nick may not know how to read and write ('know letters'), but he's a well-traveled man.

yatróz-dhyavazméno a physician [who is] very learned ('well-read')

In the sentences above, the words pandreménos 'married', pyazménes 'taken', kamoméno 'made', and all the others containing the stressed element -mén- are adjectives (in -os, -i, -o) formed from verbs. These forms are participles; and since they normally refer to actions that have taken place, the participles in -ménos (like the English ones in -ed or -en) are classed as past participles. Sometimes a given past participle may be used in either of two ways: faghoménos can mean '(having been) eaten' or 'having eaten', pyoménos '(having been) drunk' or '(having) drunk', dhyavazméno '(having been) read' or 'well-read' ('having read').

Sometimes the form in -ménos is almost a pure adjective, with little or no verbal character (e.g. krioménos 'having a cold', akuzméno 'well-known', lipiméno 'sad', yinoménos 'ripe'); but more often it is closely associated with the verb it is based on, and then it presents a state of things resulting from previous action. This latter function comes out most clearly in contrasts like the following:

pyánete 'he is being caught; he is (always) caught; he gets caught' pyástike 'he was caught (once); he got caught; he has been caught'

ine-pyazménos 'he is (already) caught; he is a captive'

(b) FORMATION. The basis of any past participle is that part of the word which is left after you drop the ending -ménos, for example, pandre- from pandreménos 'married', or pyaz- from pyazménos 'caught'. If you have never met the past participle of a given verb, you can usually arrive at it by following definite rules: for most verbs you can figure it out if you know the perfective stem for the -me forms; for a few verbs which have no -me forms you must proceed from the perfective stem for the -o forms. In the tables that are given here, each verb is cited in the I-form of the imperfective present (the form under which you would look it up in the Finder List), followed by the perfective stem for the -me forms and the basis of the past participle.

		Perfective stem -me type	Basis of past participle
anávo	'I light'	anaft-	ana- pandrévome	'I get married'	pandreft-	pandre-
strívo	'I turn; I twist'	strift-	stri-

(taksidhévo /taksidheps/ 'I travel', which lacks -me forms, has the past participle taksidhemēnos, and this model will serve for other verbs of this type that have -o forms only.)

SUMMARY: Where the perfective stem for the -me forms ends in -ft, the basis of the past participle is formed by dropping the -ft.

SUMMARY: Where the perfective stem for the -me forms ends in -th, the basis of the past participle is formed by dropping the -th.

Along with the four patterns given above, which represent the vast majority of Greek verbs, there are a certain number of participles which do not conform to any common models as regards the relationship between the basis of the past participle and the perfective stem for the -me forms. These past participles in -ménos must simply be learned by heart. Here is a complete alphabetical list of the verbs you have met up to this point which have past participles of this sort.

		Past participle
afíno	'I leave'	afiménos
dhíno	'I give'	dhozménos
dhipsó	'I am thirsty'	dhipsazménos	'very thirsty'

kâno	'I make; I do'	kamoménos
káthome	'I sit'	kathizménos	'seated; sitting' mathéno	'I teach (someone); I learn'	mathiménos	'accustomed (to)'

piyéno	'I go'	piyeménos
vrísko	'I find'	*viméno*s
yínome	'I become; I get ripe'	yinoménos	'ripe'

After this Unit, for any new verb the past participle will be given in the Finder List if it cannot be figured out from the perfective stem of the -me type (or the -o type).

Finally, it should be observed that many verbs have no participle in -ménos. Examples of such verbs are ékho 'I have', katalavéno 'I understand', kséro 'I know', févgho 'I go away; I leave'.

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You go to a doctor for advice: I have a severe headache; I have a cold. — You have a (head)cold and if you don't take good care of yourself, you'll have a cough and a fever tomorrow. You must stay in bed a day or two; take this medicine; you must take it three times a day.
2. You are going to a druggist's, right after having seen the doctor, and you meet a friend. You tell him what you said to the doctor, and what the doctor said to you.
3. You visit a friend at the hospital: May I? — Surely. Come in. — How are you getting along? — A little better, thanks. — Any pain? Any fever? Will you have to stay in the hospital long? How much longer? ('How long a time still?') How are the nurses?
4. You go to the hospital to see Anthony's wife, who has gotten burned. She shows you her head, hands, and feet, and tells you how she got burned trying to clean her husband's suit with benzine, and how she was taken from the house to the hospital.
5. You are at the hospital and you speak to a pretty nurse: I'm thirsty; give me some water, please. When will the doctor come? I have a high ('much') fever. — No, you don't. You'll be better soon. — When I'm all right again, we'll go to the movies.

Continue conversation. Additional check-up if necessary.

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

The esí-forms of the imperative. By this time you are quite familiar with the way imperatives are used, and you have already learned (in the Word Studies of Units 11 and 17) about the formation of imperatives that stand in the polite singular or the plural (e.g. dhóste 'give', milíte 'speak', etc.). In the plural polite and familiar forms are identical. It remains now to examine the esí-forms of the imperative, that is, those of the familiar singular.

(a) Imperatives of the -o type.

(1) Perfective.

pyé-to-kaiméne-leonídha-tóra.	Oh now, do drink it, Leonidas.
dhóse-mu-ena-kutí.	Give me a box [of them].
zítise-tu-patéra-leftá.	Ask (of) Father for some money.

The perfective imperative of the -o type consists, as you see, of the perfective stem (here /py/, /dhos/, /zitis/) plus -e, with the accent as far back from the end of the word as possible.

/afis/	áse	let; leave
/sopas/	sópa	shut up
/erth/	éla	come
/dh/	dhés	see
/p/	pés	say

There are, of course, some peculiar forms that must be learned especially. Here is a complete list of such forms from the verbs you have met up to this point:

/anev/	anéva	go up
/katev/	katéva	go down
/b/	émba	go in
/vgh/	évgha	go out
/vr/	vrés	find

The last five imperatives, anéva, katéva, émba (with its plural embáte), évgha (with its plural evgháte), and vrés (with its plural vréste), are -o forms, even though the verbs to which they belong form the rest of their perfective system like -me verbs: the perfective pasts anévika, katévika, bíka, vyíka, vríka, the perfective dependents anevó, katevó, bó, vghó, vró, and the two perfective imperative plurals anevíte and katevíte. Finally, there is some reason to include here the word nú 'behold!', which is often followed by the object case, as in nú-me "Here I am" ('Behold me!'), nú-ta-mas "That's a good one on us!" ('Behold them for us!').

Digitized by Google

Under certain circumstances the perfective imperative may undergo variations in form or pronunciation which it is important to observe. The first of these is occasional loss of the final vowel. Notice the following pairs of examples:

dhóse-mu-ena-kutí. Give me a box [of them].

dhóz-mu-kharti-tu-ghrapsímatos. Let me have ('Give me') some writing paper.

áse-me-tsikho. Leave me alone ('quiet').

ás-t-astía. Stop joking. ('Leave the jokes.')

As you see, final -e is sometimes dropped from a perfective imperative before an unaccented pronoun or the definite article.

The second kind of variation to notice in the perfective imperative is shift of accent, as seen in the pairs of examples that follow:

zítise-tu-patéra-leftá. Ask (of) Father for some money.

zitisé-tu-leftá. Ask him for some money.

fílakse-t-avghá. Put the eggs away.

filaksé-mu-ta. Keep them for me.

When an imperative that is ordinarily accented on the second vowel from the last is followed by an unaccented pronoun, the stress shifts to the final vowel (just as you have t-onomá-mu 'my name' as compared with t-ónoma 'the name').

(2) Imperfective.

1. Verbs accented on the stem.

ghráfe-mu-takhtiká. Write to me regularly.

plyene-ligháki-perípato. Do a little walking. ('Go walking a little.') trôe-perisôtero. Eat more.

akuê-me κ-eména. Listen to me, too (not always to others).

For verbs accented on the stem, whether the stem ends in a consonant (like /piyen/) or in a vowel (like /tro/), the imperfective imperative consists of the imperfective stem plus the same ending -e as in the perfective imperative, with the accent as far back from the end of the word as possible. Final -e is not dropped from an imperfective imperative (except from ákue 'listen (to)'). The rule for shift of accent (as in piyené-me 'take me; drive me' versus ptyene) is the same as that just given for the perfective imperative.

From verbs of this type that you have met the following imperfective imperatives are peculiar:

/lê/	lêye	say
/fevgh/	févgha	leave; go away
/trekh/	trékha	run

2. Verbs of the type ksipnó.

pyás-to ke-kráta-to-kalá. Catch it and keep a good hold on it ('hold it well').
aghápa-to-yitoná-su. Love thy neighbor.

For verbs of the type ksipnó 'I wake up' (with the third person singular in -ái) the imperfective imperative consists of the imperfective stem (e.g. /ksipn/, /krat/, /aghap/) plus -a, with the accent always on the next to the last syllable.

3. Verbs of the type milô.

fórye-to-na-me-thimáse. Wear it to remember me [by].
púlye-t-alú ta-pramatá-su. Sell your stuff somewhere else.
perpátye-moré. Keep walking, won't you?
klyé-tim-bórta to-vrádhi. Shut the door at night.

Digitized by Google
Original from
THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

For verbs of the type milô 'I speak' (with the third person singular in -s) the imperfective imperative consists of the imperfective stem (e.g. /mil/, /for/, /pul/, /perpat/) plus -ye, with the accent always on the next to the last syllable (except in the case of klyé, the imperative of klyô 'I shut'). It is not in the least unusual, however, to hear the ending -a for many imperatives of this group (e.g. mîla 'speak' instead of mîlye, perpâta 'walk' instead of perpâtye), since these verbs are strongly influenced by verbs of the type ksipnô.

It is a peculiar feature of the imperfective imperatives in -a that most of them can also be used with perfective force. Here are some examples:

kstpna psicht-mu ke-pyé-to-yatrikô-su. Wake up, darling, and drink your medicine.
mîla! Speak up!
trékha-spîro na-pâz-na-tonie-vrîs. Run, Spyros! Go and find ('to go to find') him!

This same thing is also true of a few imperfective imperatives ending in -e: ptyene (as in piyenê-me-s-to-madzéstik parakalô "Take me to the Majestic, please."), perîmene (as in perîmene mya-stighmî "Wait a moment."), and léye "What is it?" ('Say!'). The imperative âku "Listen!" belongs here, too.

(b) IMPERATIVES OF THE -me TYPE.

(1) Perfective.

1. Verbs whose perfective stem ends in -ft.

skêpsu-to-kalâ. Think it over carefully.
pandrépsu prîn-ap-ta-khristûyena. Get married before Christmas.

SUMMARY: Where the perfective stem ends in -ft, the basis of the perfective imperative ends in -ps, to which the ending -u is added.

2. Verbs whose perfective stem ends in -kht.

an-érthune-spîti-su dhêksu-tis. If they come to your house, receive them.
filâksu-akóma-stmera ke-mî-vyîs-êkso. Take care of yourself today also, and don't go out.

SUMMARY: Where the perfective stem ends in -kht, the basis of the perfective imperative ends in -ks, to which the ending -u is added.

3. Verbs whose perfective stem ends in -st or -th.

dhanísu-ap-tim-bópi.	Borrow [something] from Pope.	kuntsul	Get a move on!
pyâsu-ap-to-chêri-mu.	Take hold of my arm ('hand').	plísu.	Wash up.
ksurísu.	Get shaved.	fársu-kalâ.	Behave yourself (well).
stâsu-mya-stighmí.	Wait a minute.	válsu-na-to-kâmis.	Get at it. ('Set yourself to do it.')
khâsu-apo-dhó.	Get out of here!

SUMMARY: Where the perfective stem ends either in -st or in -th, the basis of the perfective imperative ends in -s, to which the ending -u is added.

You see that the element -su is common to all three types, and that the accent always comes on the next to the last syllable.

The verb sikóno 'I lift; I raise' is peculiar in having a perfective imperative that is not formed according to the pattern just stated: this imperative is síko 'get up'. The five imperatives anéva, katéva, émba, évgha, vrés, for which you might look here, have been treated in Section (a) (1) of this Comment.

(2) Imperfective. There exist imperfective imperatives of the -me type, formed by adding either -u or -yú to the imperfective stem (according to definite rules), but such imperative forms are extremely rare, and in ordinary speech they are replaced by another form of expression. This will be taken up in Unit 25.

COMMENT 2

MORE ABOUT NOUNS. Since Unit 5, where the forms of nouns were last treated, a few more case forms and some new noun types have appeared.

(a) NEUTER NOUNS.

1. Neuter nouns in -a.

o-kírios tu-khítmatos	the owner of the estate
ine-ta-próta-ghrâmata tu-onomató-su.	Those are your initials. ('They are the first letters of your name.')

Original from THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY

Nouns of this type (all of which have an m before the -a with the exception of ghála 'milk') add -tos to the subject-object form of the singular to make the restrictive case: thus tu-khtímatos 'of the farm', tu-onómatos 'of the name', etc. The shift of accent in onómatos as compared to ónoma is just like that found in the plural onómata (see Comment 1 of Unit 5). The nouns of this kind that you have met since Unit 5 are: dhéma 'package', dhiálima 'interval; intermission', ghráma 'letter', tfazma 'cloth', khartonómizma 'paper money', khróma 'color', pálema 'wrestling', pátoma 'floor', práma 'thing', pséma 'lie', tileghráfima 'telegram'.

Here is a table of all the forms:

		'letter'	'name'	Endings:
sing.	subj.-obj.	to-ghráma	to-ónoma	-a
	rest.	tu-ghrámatos	tu-onómatos	-atos
plur.	subj.-obj.	ta-ghrámata	ta-onómata	-ata

One neuter in -as that you have learned, kréas 'meat', is like the nouns in -a in its restrictive form kréatos 'of the meat'.

2. Neuter nouns in -simo.

emís ekhum-athlitês pu-dhén-dus-pernái-kanéna-s-to-tréksimo. — We have athletes that are way ahead of anybody ('that nobody surpasses') in running.

khartí-tu-ghrapsímatos — writing paper ('paper of the writing')

Nouns ending in -simo in the subject-object form of the singular undergo a change of the final -o to -atos in the restrictive case; the plural, ending in -ata, is very rare. The accent is on the second syllable from the last in all forms. Note that ghramatósimo 'postage stamp' (restrictive ghramatósimu) is not of this type.

This is the full set of forms:

		'running'	Endings:
sing.	subj.-obj.	tréksimo	(sim)o
	rest.	treksímatos	(sím)atos

		'continual running to and fro'
plur.	subj.-obj.	trekstmata	(stm)ata

3. Neuter nouns in -os.

apo-pyó-méros	from what part?
tétyu-tdhu-sizitsis	those kind of conversations ('conversations of that kind')
s-ta-méri-mas	in these parts ('in our region')

Nouns of this type change the ending -os of the subject-object form of the singular to -us to make the restrictive case, and to -i to make the plural.

The full set of forms is as follows:

		'place'	'sort'	Endings:
sing.	subj.-obj.	méros	tdhos	-os
	rest.	mérus	tdhus	-us
plur.	subj.-obj.	méri	tdhi	-i

(b) FEMININE NOUNS IN -si, AND póli 'CITY'.

i-próti-thésí echi-tighus-epivátes.	[Very] few people ride first class. ('The first class has few passengers.')
dhén-gunúse-ap-ti-thési-tu.	He wouldn't budge from the spot ('was not moving from his position').
i-kabínes tis-prótis-théseos	the first-class staterooms ('the cabins of the first class')
próti-ap-óla thá-ferna-prótis-tákseoz-dhaskálus.	First of all I'd bring first-rate teachers ('teachers of first class').

tétyu-tdhu-sizittsis dhen-delyónune-poté. Those kind of conversations ('conversations of that kind') never get finished.

i-athína ke-i-salonîki ine-i-meghalíteres-pólis tis-eládhas. Athens and Salonica are the largest cities in Greece.

s-tis-thésu-sas! All aboard! ('To your seats!')

Feminine nouns in -si, together with póli 'city', seldom follow the pattern of ordinary feminine nouns in -i (e.g. kóri 'daughter') throughout all their forms. This is not to say that you may not sometimes hear forms like tis-pólis 'of the city', i-póles 'the cities', i-dhiéfthises 'the addresses', according to the model of kóri. But it happens that most of the feminine nouns of this group have come in from the learned language and that even in everyday speech the people tend strongly to retain the learned endings -eos for the restrictive case and -is for the plural, as illustrated in the examples above. (You are familiar with a similar situation in English, where we often use learned plurals such as indices or hippopotami instead of indexes or hippopotamuses.) The accent goes back as far as possible from the end in the singular (e.g. subj. sizítisi, rest. sizítseos) and in the popular form of the plural (e.g. dhiéfthises), but in the learned form of the plural (e.g. sizítsis) the accent never goes further back than the vowel of the next to the last syllable. The nouns of this kind that you have met are: dhiéfthisi 'address', kathistérisi 'delay', léksi 'word', óreksi 'appetite', prâksi 'act', sizítisi 'discussion', stási 'stop', táksi 'order; class', thési 'position; class (of traveling accommodations)'.

Here is a table of the forms that you are perhaps most likely to hear:

		'discussion'	Endings:	'city'
sing.	subj-obj.	sizítisi	-(s)i	póli
	rest.	sizítseos	-(s)eos	póleos
plur.	subj.-obj.	sizítsis	-(s)is	pólis

(c) SOME NOUNS WITH SPECIAL FORMS.

1. dhespínis 'young lady'.

boró-na-sas-parusiáso-ti-dhespinídha-khristofóru?	May I present (to you) Miss Christophorou?
i-dhespinídhes-khristofóru	the Misses Christophorou

The noun dhespinídha 'young lady; miss' has in the cities the learned variant dhespinís in the subject-address form of the singular.

2. odhós 'Street'.

aftí-ine-i-odhós-anglías.	This is England St.
s-tin-odhón-anglías	on England St.

The word odhós 'Street', from the learned language, is feminine and has the ending -on in the object case.

(d) PECULIAR PLURALS. Among the nouns you have met so far there are a few that do not form their plurals according to any common patterns:

'wind'	aéras	:	aéridhes	'relative'	singenís	:	singenís
'barber'	kuréas	:	kuréidhes	'year'	khrónos m.	:	khrónya n.
'chauffeur'	sofér	:	soféridhes	'light'	fós	:	fóta
'neighbor'	yítonas	:	yitóni	'garage'	garáz	:	garázya
'rascal'	katerghári s	:	katerghárei

(e) UNCHANGEABLE NOUNS. Certain nouns that have come into the language rather recently from abroad are invariable in form, except that garáz and sofér have the special plural forms given in the preceding section.

o sofér	'chauffeur'	to spór	'sport'
to burbúr	'tip'	to taksí	'taxi'
to eksprés	'express (train)'	to vagonlí	'sleeping car'
to garáz	'garage'

Section E—Conversation

1. Covering the Greek of Basic Sentences

With the Greek covered, practice until you can speak the Greek for each English sentence without hesitation. This is individual study.

2. Vocabulary Check-Up

Give the Greek for all English sentences in the Basic Sentences as the Leader calls for it.

3. Conversation

Suggested Topics:

1. You make a long-distance call to a friend of yours: You tell him you want to see him and you give him the day, the date, and the exact time of your arrival. He asks you what ship and what class you intend to take and whether you're coming alone or with your wife, etc.
2. On a Greek ship you make the acquaintance of the captain: When do we start? When do we arrive? Will we have a delay? How old is the ship? How's the engine? How many miles an hour does it make? How many sailors are there on it? How many engineers? What salary do they get? Do you have a doctor, a nurse, etc.?
3. On a Greek ship you complain about your cabin: I can't sleep very well. My cabin's near the engine; there's only one window; I'm not alone; the man in the upper ('up') berth smokes all the time; my berth is hard; I want a cabin to myself, etc.
4. On your arrival in port you call a boatman: take my luggage; it's down in the cabin: four small pieces, two large pieces, and a typewriter; my passport's already been examined. Will my luggage also be examined at the customs? I have a few cigarettes and five or six bottles of wine. Do you think I'll have to pay something for it? etc.
5. Your friend is waiting at the pier: you exchange social amenities; he asks you about the weather, the food, and the passengers on your ship; you tell him you can stay at his house only a few days; you have to leave on such and such a day, and you ask for the address of the American consul.

REVIEW

SECTION A—WHAT DO YOU KNOW IN GREEK?

To the Group Leader: Section A of this Unit consists of a little story (an episode of the Greek War of Independence, 1821–1828) to be read to the group by the Guide. If you have no Guide, choose, or have the group choose, one of the members to do the reading. Get someone whose voice and pronunciation are good and clear, and who has familiarized himself with Greek spelling. The text of the story is printed in the Guide's Manual.

See that each member of the group is provided with a sheet of paper and a pen or pencil. Before the story is read, give the group three minutes to familiarize themselves with the ten questions in Greek that are asked about it. Then have the story read twice, and give them ten minutes to answer the questions, writing down IN ENGLISH a simple answer to each.

After the quiz is over, correct as in Units 6, 12, and 18. Call an answer correct only if it shows clearly that the group member really understood both the question asked and the part of the story which gave the answer to the question.

This Unit is again a review of the work covered up to now. For the most part it is like Units 6, 12, and 18. The first section, however, consists of a little story (an episode of the Greek War of Independence, 1821–1828) about which ten questions are asked. These questions are printed below. Familiarize yourself with the ten questions, and then listen carefully as the story is read to you. Don't try to write down the answers to the questions while the story is being read; either sit still and listen, or at the most just write down a key word for each question. After the story has been read, write down IN ENGLISH your answer to each question. Make your answers brief and to the point.

When the story has been read, and you have had a chance to answer all the questions, the Guide or Group Leader will go over the answers with you.

Section F—Conversation Review

Hold a series of conversations on any of the topics covered so far. All members of the group should have a chance to take part. Here are some suggested topics:

1. In a Greek travel agency: I'd like to go to Salonica by boat; there are three ships going per week. Which one do you think is the best? What's the price of a return ticket, first class? Have you cabins with only one berth? Can I eat alone? What can one see in Salonica (fortress, churches, harbor, etc.)? What tours can one make? Which is the best hotel? etc.
2. You speak to a hotel clerk: I have to write a letter; I want some paper. Will you give me some? What's the date? How much postage ('What stamp') does this letter require ('want')? Have you got any stamps? When does the mail to America go out? Can the boy take this letter to the post office and pay the postage [on it]? Give the boy a good tip and tell me afterwards how much I have to pay.
3. You go to a bookstore: I'd like something to read; it must be written by a Greek. — Take this one, it's beautiful. Palamás wrote it. — Can you tell me the title of it? — "The eyes of my soul." — Have you anything else? — Something to make you laugh? — Yes. — Read Laskarátos. If you read him you'll learn a lot of things about our life over here. You buy the two books and take time to chat with the clerk about American writers, too.
4. You want to go to a museum: What time does it open? What time does it close? Is it closed on Sunday? I'd like to see the head of that ancient god they found in the sea. Or are they still cleaning it? Is the marble still white? Have you been on the Acropolis? Is it open from morning till night? Is one allowed to go up at night? Does one need a permit? etc.

5. You call up a doctor for your friend who is sick. Describe his symptoms as well as you can. You then go to the post office and send a telegram to his mother. Next you buy stamps and take time to chat with the girl about her work.
6. You do your daily shopping. Go first to a bakery, then to a grocery store, and finally to a meat market. Talk to the baker, grocer, and butcher about the quality of the food and the postwar prices.
7. A boy is out walking with his girl and her sister. They meet one of his friends and he introduces him to the girls. The boys start talking about sports, but the girls are a little bored. One girl works in a bank, the other is a nurse. The boys ask them about their work. Finally they ask the girls to go with them to a movie and discuss which one they should go to.
8. You talk with a Greek about Greek and American students. You tell him of the many opportunities students have in America (books, new buildings, stadiums, hospitals, etc.). He deplores the conditions in Greece, but adds that the Greek student is very intelligent and wants to learn.

PART FIVE

GEOGRAPHY

[NOTE: This is the fifth and last part of our Manual. By now you are well acquainted with our method, and it is not necessary any more to explain our procedure in each Section. Do the same as you have done before. As far as the Conversations go, you know enough Greek now not to need the help of suggested topics such as have been given previously. Do not forget, however, that they still are the main goal of all Units.]

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

na-CLAUSES. Since Units 7 and 8, when you first studied the use of na (after thélo 'I want', borό 'I can', etc.), you have encountered a great variety of na-clauses, a brief classification of which is essayed here. You will recall that while our word 'that' is the best literal equivalent for na (as in prépi-na-fígho-tóra "It is necessary that I leave now."), in everyday language our infinitive (e.g. 'to do', 'to go') is very often the mόst natural equivalent for na plus the following verb-form (as when we render the foregoing example by "I have to leave now."). A na-clause in which the verb is put in the negative is introduced by na-mín (e.g. to-móno-práma-pu-thélo ine-na-mín-do-máth-i-pόpi "The only thing I want [to make sure of] is that Pope doesn't find out [about] it.").

(a) DEPENDENT.

(1) After verbs.

1. Optional na-clauses.

yatί-dhen-érthate na-me-dhíte?	Why haven't you come to see me?
tha-píyena na-tu-fέro-ligho-krasί.	I'd go (to) get him a little wine.
stάsu kirά-mu na-katevíne-i-epivάtes.	Stand [where you are], ma'am, so the passengers [can] get off.
fόrye-to-na-me-thimάse.	Wear it to remember me [by].
tha-zísiz-na-yínis-ekatό-khronόne.	You'll live to be a hundred years old.

In sentences like those above, where the main clause (e.g. stásu 'stand [where you are]', fórye-to 'wear it', tha-zísis 'you will live') is quite complete in itself, the na-clause is optional and expresses purpose. This type of na-clause may be found after practically any verb, though it is found most commonly after verbs of motion. In such instances as the last example in the set above, the na-clause (like the corresponding infinitive in English) brings out rather the result than the purpose of an action.

Purpose clauses may begin, however, with ya-na instead of simple na, as in these sentences:

prépi-na-dhósi ya-na-pári.	He must give, in order to get.
nikyasa-en-aftokínito ya-na-me-pái-s-tin-athína.	I hired a car to take ('in order that it take') me to Athens.
tha-katevi-s-tin-aghorá ya-na-kámi-ta-psónya-tis.	She'll come down to the market to do her purchasing.
dhé-zis-móno-ya-na-dhulévis.	You don't just live to work.
o-yánis ya-na-érthi khrizete-leftá.	John's got to have ('needs') money before he'll come ('in order to come').

The combination ya-na differs from na alone in being more explicit and in that the clause it introduces may stand before the main clause of a sentence. An example like trékha-spíro na-páz-na-tone-vris "Run, Spyros! Go and find ('to go to find') him!" shows that the combination na plus a form of páo, when followed by another na-clause, produces a similar strengthening of the idea of purpose.

2. Necessary na-clauses. Study carefully the following examples, which are listed according to the ideas conveyed by the verbs that introduce the na-clauses.

necessity	prépi-na-tu-apandíso-amésos.	I have to answer him immediately.
	ikha-na-kámo-me-to-leonídha.	It was Leonidas that I had to deal with.
	éprepe-na-to-léghate.	You should have told [them] that.
possibility	bori-n-arostísete.	You may get sick.
ability	o-sofér dhem-borúse-na-strípsi-éfkola.	The chauffeur couldn't make turns easily.
hope	elpízo-ná-ne-bendzína s-aftón-don-deneké.	I hope there's some gasoline in that can.

wish	dhé-thélo-na-to-kséri-i-miléra.	I don't want Mother to know (it).
	thá-thela-na-tó-perna.	I'd [certainly] like to take it.
preference	kalítera-ekho-na-petháno para-na-zó-tétya-zoí.	I'd rather ('I consider it better to') die than lead ('live') such a life.
intention	iche-na-pái-s-tin-dhápeza.	He intended to go to the bank.
command	pés-tiz-miléras na-su-dhósi.	Tell Mother to give you [some money].
enjoyment	m-arési-n-akúo-ti-sizítisi.	I like hearing the discussion.
dislike	varyéme-na-t-akúo moré-pedhí-mu.	I can't be bothered listening to them, my boy.
beginning	válsu-na-to-kámis.	Get at it. ('Set yourself to it.') dhé-th-archísi-ap-ávrio-na-ikonomái.	He won't start saving from tomorrow on.

In sentences like the ones just quoted the na-clause supplies an addition which is required by the main verb of the sentence (e.g. prépi 'it is necessary', borúse 'he could', pés 'tell!'). If it is possible to make any generalization covering the numerous verbs that introduce na-clauses in such sentences as these, we may say that most of them express futurity, uncertainty, wish, or emotion of some sort.

Sometimes one and the same verb may be followed by either na or pos. Observe how the na-clause differs in effect from the pos-clause in each of these pairs of examples:

mín-gzekhnás pos-ise-pandreménos.	Don't forget that you're a married man.
ksékhasa-na-sas-pó.	I forgot to tell you.
vlépo-pos-isẹ-páli-pyoménos.	I see you're drunk again.
a-yirtso-píso símera-okhtó dhéz-na-mín-ise-páli-pyoménos.	If I come back in a week, see that you're not drunk again.
pistévo-po-sas-idha edhó-ke-dhyó-mínes s-ta-lutrá-tiz-ghlifádhas.	I believe I saw you two months ago at (the baths of) Glyphada.
dhém-bistévo-na-ne-mésa-tóra.	I don't think he's in now.
élegha poz-dhulévi-arghá.	I thought he worked ('works') late.

lêz-na-m-aghapái-akóma-o-níkos? Do you think Nick still loves me?

to-ikseres pos-éfiye. You knew that he had left.

dhen-gzéro-ná-khune-skolyá-edho-péra. I don't know that they have any schools around here.

The word pos introduces a clause expressing what is a fact or a strong probability in the speaker's opinion. The word na, on the contrary, introduces a clause expressing an action to be carried out (e.g. ksékhasa-na 'I forgot to', dhéz-na 'see to it that') or (often after a verb in the negative or the interrogative) presenting a thought as uncertain (e.g. dhémbistévo-na 'I don't think that . . .', lêz-na . . .? 'do you think that . . .?'). Where a verb may be followed by either pos or na, the difference between the two must be grasped clearly.

In general, the verb used in any na-clause stands in either the imperfective present or the perfective dependent according to the situation (as treated in Unit 7, Comment 4). But certain cases call for special comment. The verb of the na-clause is in the imperfective or perfective past if the action it expresses clearly precedes in time the action of the main verb: e.g. dhe-thimûme-na-to-tdha. "I don't remember to have seen it." After any form of archtzo 'I begin' the verb-form in the na-clause is always imperfective (e.g. t-aftokínito árchise-na-tréchi-polí-ghlíghora "The car began to really travel ('to run very fast').") under the influence of the idea of incompleteness in the very meaning of the introductory verb archtzo. A formal influence from the introductory verb upon the na-clause is evident in two of the examples cited earlier (thá-thela-na-tó-perna "I'd [certainly] like to takeit" and éprepe-na-to-léghate "You should have told [them] that."): where the introductory verb is conditional (tha plus imperfective past) or has conditional force (imperfective past), the verb of the na-clause may itself take the form of an imperfective past instead of the expected perfective dependent or imperfective present.

3. na-clauses after a direct object.

tus-tdha-na-piyénune káto-s-to-yaló. I saw them going down to the beach.

se-vlépo-na-yelás. I [can] see you laughing.

afíste-me-na-to-vró-mónoz-mu. Let me find it myself.

kanénaz-dhen-áfine-to-fortáki na-perási. Nobody would let the Ford (go) through.

dhén-ine-móno-i-fróso pu-me-káni-n-aghapó-tin-eládha. It isn't only Phroso that makes me love Greece.

These examples are different from those in the preceding section on necessary na-clauses in that here the introductory verb has a direct object (e.g. tus-tdha 'I saw them', afíste-me 'let me!', me-káni 'makes me'). The introductory verbs in sentences like the ones above are: verbs of perception like vlépo 'I see', akúo 'I hear', vrísko 'I find'; and such verbs as afíno 'I allow', parakaló 'I request', and káno 'I make'. It is to be noted that the direct object of any introductory verb of the group under discussion, particularly if that object is a noun, may be converted into the subject of the na-clause: thus, beside tídha-to-níko-na-pernái you may hear tídha-na-pernái-o-níkos for "I saw Nick passing by." This latter sentence pattern is just like the type treated above under the necessary na-clauses.

(2) After nouns.

mu-kánis-ti-khári na-páz-na-tone-dhís?	Will you do me the favor of going ('that you go') to see him?
thá-trekha-polí-ghlíghora me-tin-idhéa-n-aníkso-mya-pórta ke-na-pidhíso-mésa.	I'd run full speed ('very fast') with the idea of opening a door and jumping on ('in').
dhén-ekhune-neró-na-pyúne.	They haven't [even] got water to drink.
ékho-ena-soro-psónya-na-kámo.	I have a lot of purchases to make.

As these examples show, na-clauses may be used after a noun, either by way of defining it (e.g. ti-khári na-pás 'the favor of going') or, when the noun is the object of ékho, to state a purpose for which the noun is being considered (e.g. neró-na-pyúne 'water (for them) to drink').

(b) INDEPENDENT.

(1) Wish.

1st person	na-saz-dhíkso.	Let me show you.
2nd person	na-mu-ghráfis-takhtiká.	You must (or Be sure to) write to me regularly.
	k-ésí na-me-thimáse-pánda.	And you must remember me always.
3rd person	na-su-zísi!	I wish you joy of him. ('May he live for you!' — a phrase used toward a parent on first seeing his child)

When used independently a na-clause can express a wish or command in the first, second, or third person. There is only one first-person verb-form in Greek that can be used without na to express a wish, the form páme 'let's go'. In the case of the second person, for which the language possesses real imperatives, the na-clauses are used whenever the speaker wishes to convey a command or request more softly or politely (that is, na-mu-ghráfis, for example, is milder than ghráfe-mu). It is this mode of expression which has gone far toward supplanting entirely the imperfective imperatives of the -me type (see Unit 17, Comment 1, and Unit 23, Comment 1).

(2) Deliberation.

na-tu-to-pó? i-na-mín-du-to-pó?	Shall I tell him or not?
ke-tóra tí-na-kámo?	And now what am I to do?
tí-na-yíni?	There's nothing I can do about it. ('What is to be done?')
tí-na-su-pó?	to tell you the truth ('what am I to say to you?')
ke-pú-na-to-vró?	(Now,) how would I have ('where am I to find') that much?

A clause introduced by na is used in a situation where a person is represented as consulting with himself or others as to his course of action.

(3) Surprise.

ke-na-skéftome pos-ise-tría-khrónya-mikroteróz-mul (And) to think that you're three years younger than I [am]!

Independent na-clauses are sometimes used in exclamations of surprise or indignation.

The words prôtos, dhéftero, trîti, pémti in the examples above are forms of numeral adjectives (in -os, -i, -o) indicating order or rank. (The traveler's term dheftéra-thési 'second class' contains the special feminine form dheftéra.) Here is the full set of adjectives of this type from 'first' to 'tenth'.

prôtos	'first'	ékhtos	'sixth'
dhéfteros	'second'	évdhomos	'seventh'
trîtos	'third'	óghdhoos	'eighth'
tétartos	'fourth'	énatos	'ninth'
pémtos	'fifth'	dhékatos	'tenth'

Above dhékatos, and often even below it, speakers of Greek avoid numerals of this type and use other means of expression instead, especially phrases containing plain numbers, such as the following:

o-éndeka	the eleventh
perpatí-s-ta-dhódheka.	He's in his twelfth year. (or He's going on twelve.)
éyine-dheka-pénde-khrónone.	He's had his fifteenth birthday. ('He has become fifteen years old.')

(b) THE MONTHS.

ap-to-mái-tsa-me-to-dhekévri	from May right through to December
s-tis-ikosi-pénde-tu-dhekemvrtu	on the twenty-fifth of December

The two examples given here will serve to illustrate the fact that colloquial Greek has two sets of names for the months: thus in the first example you find dhekévris (in the object case) and in the second dhekémvrios (in the restrictive case) for 'December'. The word dhekévris is the popular word, while dhekémvrios is its learned equivalent. Now, when a Greek speaker uses both kinds of names for a given month, he will ordinarily use them as they are handled above, that is, he will use the popular form when he is speaking of the month in a general way and the learned form when he gives a date in which the name of the month occurs in the restrictive case after a number indicating the day (e.g. ikosi-pénde-tu-dhekemvrtu). There is a strong tendency, however, for the learned forms to spread beyond this last-mentioned use and to crowd out the popular forms. Certainly the popular names mártis, aprîlis, and máis for

'March', 'April', and 'May', respectively, are employed almost universally. But since you will hear various speakers using various forms we can only give you the two sets of names of the months in full and advise you to familiarize yourself with both.

	Popular	Learned		Popular	Learned
January	o-yenâris	o-ianuârios	July	o-yúlis	o-iúlios
February	o-flevâris	o-fevruârios	August	o-âghustos	o-âvghustos
March	o-mârtis	o-mârtios	September	o-setévris	o-septémvrios
April	o-aprîlis	o-aprîlios	October	o-okhtóvris	o-októvrios
May	o-mâis	o-mâios	November	o-noévris	o-noémvrios
June	o-yûnis	o-iúnios	December	o-dhekévris	o-dhekémvrios

(c) DATES.

(1) Answering the questions "What day is it today?" "What's the date today?"

tí-ekhume-símera? — dheftéra. — póses-tu-minós? — dhéka-tu-dhekemvríu.

What day is it ('What have we') today? — Monday. — What's the date? ('How many of the month?') — The tenth ('Ten') of December.

póses-tu-minós ekhume-símera? — símera ekhume-próti-tu-minós.

What's the date ('How many of the month have we') today? — Today's the ('Today we have') first of the month.

The foregoing examples contain some very common formulas for asking what the current day or date is, together with typical answers. With the adjective póses the noun méres 'days' is understood, as méra is understood with tí in the first example and with próti in the phrase próti-tu-minós. When the day of the month is any other than the first, it is usually put in the form of a plain number (e.g. dhío 'the second', dhéka 'the tenth').

(2) Answering the questions "On what day?" "In what month?" "In what year?"

dhen-élaves-to-mistó-su tim-bróti-tu-minós?	Didn't you get your pay the first of the month?
ftáni-s-ti-néa-yórki s-tis-ikosi-pénde-tu-dhekemvríu.	You'll arrive in New York December twenty-fifth ('on the twenty-fifth of December').
ton-aprîli-i-to-mái	in April or May yenîthike s-ta-chílya-enyakósya-saranda-pénde.	He was born in nineteen forty-five.
s-tis-éksi-tu-iuníu tu-chílya-enyakósya-saranda-tésera	on June sixth nineteen ('of one thousand nine hundred') forty-four

In the examples above, you have not by any means all, but perhaps the most common patterns to use in answer to the questions posed in the heading to this section of the Comment. There are several points to observe in handling phrases of this sort: (1) you must remember the gender of the nouns that are understood in the phrases — feminine for 'day', and neuter for 'year'; (2) tim-bróti 'the first (day)' and names of months are used in the object case to express time, whereas years and days of the month later than the first are used with s plus the definite article; (3) when standing after a month-name the figure for a year is introduced by the neuter article tu.

Τί βουνὰ εἶν' αὐτὰ μπροστά μας;
Εἶναι τὰ βουνὰ τοῦ Μοριά.
Μ' αὐτὸν τὸν καιρὸ ξεχωρίζει κανένας τὶς πιὸ μακρυνὲς βουνοκορφές.
Μισὴ ὥρ' ἀκόμα καὶ φτάσαμε.
Ἡ Αἴγινα βρίσκεται ἀκριβῶς στὴ μέση τοῦ κόρφου.
Ξερὸ νησί.
Πολὺ ξερό.
Δὲν ἔχει πολὺ νερό.
Κάνα δυὸ ξεροπόταμα μόνο καὶ δυὸ τρεῖς βρύσες.

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

The use of ke. The purpose of this Comment is to provide, by way of review, a survey of the various uses of ke that you have met in the Units so far.

(a) 'and'

eghó ke-ta-pedhyá-mu	my children and I pái-ke-psonízi	she goes and does the marketing

se-vlépo-na-yelás ke-na-lés . . .	I [can] see you laughing and saying . . .
ky-aftós-o-mikrós pyós-tne?	And who is this little fellow?
k-i-pópi?	(And) what about Pope?

(b) 'also; too', 'even'

k-eghó ergházome-polí.	I work hard, too.
ekho-k-enan-adherfó ke-mya-adherfí.	I have a brother and a sister, too.
a-s-aghapúse-prín s-aghapái-kaiméni-ke-tóra.	If he loved you before, he loves you now, too, silly.
ke-kápote k-ena-krasáki	and sometimes a little drink of wine, too
ke-psomí parakaló.	[And] bread, too, please.
ky-ávrio méra-tne.	Tomorrow's another day. ('Tomorrow also is a day.')
a-lávis-kanena-ghráma k-ine-ghraméno-ap-to-níko stile-mú-to-k-eména.	If you get a letter and it's from ('written by') Nick, send it on to me ('send it to me also').
pái zvísane-ky-aftí.	Now even they are gone ('have gone out').
ky-o-patéra-sas ta-tídhya-léi-ky-aftós.	Even your father says the same. ('And your father says the same, even he.') pézune-futból kalítera-ky-apo-sás-tus-amerikanús.	They play football better than you Americans, even.

When ke means 'too' or 'even', it stands immediately before the word or phrase it applies to. (Thus, where a prepositional phrase is concerned, as in the last example, ke is to be placed before the preposition.) A comparison of such a pair of examples as ke-kápote k-ena-krasáki 'and sometimes a little drink of wine, too' and ke-psomí parakaló "[And] bread, too, please" would seem to show that a given clause may contain two instances of ke, one for 'and' and the other for 'too', provided they would not occur in immediate succession. The combination dhén . . . ke (or ke . . . dhén) may be equivalent to our 'not . . . either', as in the sentence tóte dhé-tha-tídhate-vévea-ke-ta-aghálmata "Then you surely couldn't have seen the statues either."

In certain situations Greek uses ke where we usually have no 'also' or 'too' to correspond to it. Some examples are the following:

In a great variety of situations, of which only a few have occurred in the Units so far, Greek will use a sentence composed of two clauses connected by ke, where English uses a complex sentence consisting of a main clause followed by some dependent element (clause, prepositional phrase, infinitive, etc.). Very often ke plays the role of na or pu; sometimes it stands for pos. Thus in the following sentence the second clause may be introduced in any one of these three ways:

tus-tdha { na-piyénune. / pu-piyénane. / ke-piyénane. } I saw them going { ('that they go'). / ('as they were going'). / ('and they were going'). }

The last sentence in the examples cited at the beginning of this section shows how ke may replace pos (compare nómizes pos-káti-mésa-tu-ton-ékee "You would have thought something inside of him was burning him up.").

(h) Various combinations containing ke.

(1) káthome-ke

tí-kátheste ke-me-kitázete?	Why do you keep looking ('sit and look') at me?
tí-káthese-ke-perimḗnis?	Why do you wait around?
káthete-ke-milí-ya-ti-mitéra-mu pu-dhén-dine-kséri.	He has to go and talk about my mother, when he doesn't [even] know her.

The combination káthome-ke plus a following verb is used in two quite different ways: it may mean 'I continue to', 'I keep . . . -ing', as in the first two examples above, or it may mean 'I thoughtlessly . . .', as in the last two examples.

(2) edhó-ke . . . (object case) '. . . ago'

edhó-k-ena-mína	a month ago

edhó-ke-dhyo-óres two hours ago edhó-ke-téseriz-vdhomádhes four weeks ago

(3) negative + ke-tóso 'not . . . so very'

ma-dhé-vréchi ke-tóso-polí. But it doesn't rain so very much.
ine-kakós-o-kerósi? — óchi-ke-tóso-kakós. Is the weather bad? — Not so very bad.

(4) k-i-dhyó 'both', k-i-trís 'all three', etc.

ine-k-i-dhyó-pyazménes? Are both [seats] taken?
a-khásis-ke-ta-dhío if you lose both dhém-boríte-na-párete ke-tis-trís. You can't take all three.

When preceding the definite article plus a numeral the word ke lays stress on the totality of the group in question. The force of ke in these combinations can best be brought out by comparison with instances of article plus numeral not preceded by ke, e.g. ti-kathómaste-spíti-i-dhyó-mas? "Why are we two sitting home?" or yatí-dhem-bám-i-trízmas s-ton-garagyózi? "Why don't we go to the Karaguez [play], the three of us?" Here the use of k-i-dhyó-mas 'both of us' or 'k-i-trízmas' 'all three of us' would give a slightly different meaning to the sentences.

(5) mólis-ke 'with difficulty; hardly' mólis-ke-fénonde-ta-fóta-tu. You can just make out the lights of it. ('The lights of it hardly appear.') to-vapóri mólis-ke-stamatái-pénde-leftá. The boat hardly waits five minutes.

COMMENT 2

APPOSITION.

in-o-thíos-o-yánis. It's Uncle John.

In these sentences the nouns yánis and yó are said to be in apposition to the nouns thíos and pedhí, respectively, which they stand beside and which they either identify or characterize. (In the second example the word yó itself has in apposition to it the noun pétro.) As you see from these sentences, the appositive (as we call a noun that is in apposition to another) stands in the same case as the noun it goes with. In general, apposition is a simple matter, but it calls for particular study in connection with three things: expressions of quantity, names of persons, and names of nationalities.

(a) EXPRESSIONS OF QUANTITY.

ena-ekatomírio-dhrakhmés	a million drachmas
kamya-dhekaryá-dhrakhmés	about ten ('a group of ten') drachmas
pénde-zevghárya-papútsya	five pairs of shoes
ena-soro-vivlía	a lot of books
ena-komáti-psomí	a piece of bread
ena-kutí-sokoládes	a box of chocolates
tríz-lítres-zákhari	three pounds of sugar
mya-botílya-ládhi	a bottle of olive oil
dhyó-potírya-krasí	two glasses of wine
misí-óra-stási	a half-hour of waiting (or a half-hour's wait)
dhéka-leftá-dhiálima	ten minutes of intermission (or ten minutes' intermission)

When an expression involves two nouns, one for a unit of quantity, the other for what is counted or measured, in Greek the latter noun stands in apposition to the former. (In English we have apposition in such expressions only after certain units of counting, e.g. 'a million drachmas', 'a dozen eggs', and even then not in the indefinite plural, where we say 'millions of drachmas', 'dozens of eggs', etc.). Among nouns of quantity the word soro is noteworthy in that, like the limiting words kanenas, tipota, lighos, in the position before a noun it is used without any accent, as in ena-soro-vivlía 'a lot of books' (but zúne-polí-amerikaní-ekí? — né, ena-soró "Do many Americans live there? — Yes, a good many.").

In the phrases cited above as examples the appositives are all feminine or neuter, so that they would not differ in form whether the nouns of quantity were in the subject or the object case in any given sentence. Now look at the following examples:

ítane-trís-chilyádhes-amerikaní-s-tin-italía.	There were three thousand Americans in Italy.
pyós-apo-sás théli-na-dhí ena-ekatomírio-amerikanús?	Which of you wants to see a million Americans?
ékho-ena-soro-fílus.	I have a lot of friends.
dhóz-mu-mya-lítra-kafé.	Give me a pound of coffee.
brostá-s-to-mulári vriskótan-ena-dhemáti-sanós.	In front of the mule was a bundle of hay.
páno-s-ena-ráfi itan-ena-bukéto-kríni.	On a shelf there was a bouquet of lilies.
béni-i-eléni m-ena-bukéto-krínu-s-to-chéri.	Helen comes in with a bouquet of lilies on her arm.
s-tin-galifórnya ékhume trakósyes ekstínda pénde méres fílyo to-khróno.	In California we have three hundred and sixty-five days of sunshine a year.
dhéka-órez-dhrómos-pedhí-mu dhén-in-astío.	A ten-hour hike is no joke, let me tell you.

In these examples the appositives are all masculine, and you have a chance to see that they stand in the same case in any given sentence as the nouns of quantity.

As for instances in which the noun of quantity would occur in the restrictive case, they are very rare in actual experience, since speakers almost always cast their sentences in such a form as not to use them. Here is an example of this kind:

ena-potíri-krasí póso-kostízi? What's the price of a glass of wine? ('How much does a glass of wine cost?')

Finally, compare the following expressions of quantity in which Greek uses only one noun, while English uses two.

ena-psomí	a loaf of bread	ena-stafíli	a bunch of grapes
mya-súpa	a plate of soup	mya-stafídha	a bunch of currants
ena-frúto	a piece of fruit	ena-ghlikó	a piece of pastry

ena-paghotó	a dish (or stick) of ice cream	ena-krasí	a glass of wine
ena-neró	a glass of water	ena-krasáki	a little drink of wine enas-kafés	a cup of coffee	ena-sapúni	a cake of soap
mya-bíra	a glass of beer

In some instances a noun which is the name of a substance (e.g. psomí 'bread') may be used to denote a certain unit quantity of that substance (e.g. ena-psomí 'a loaf of bread').

(b) NAMES OF PERSONS.

(1) Men's names.

o-tákis-o-kladhás	Takes Kladas	o-mítsos-o-roilós	Metsos Roilos
o-kírios-kladhás	Mr. Kladas	o-yórghos-o-khristofóru	George Christophorou
o-níkos-o-makrís	Nick Makres	enaz-níkos-aravandinós	a Nick Aravantinos
o-kírioz-makrís	Mr. Makres

Men's full names, or their last names preceded by kírios 'Mr.', are instances of apposition, with agreement in case between the last name and the first name or kírios (thus o-tákis-o-kladhás subj., ton-dáki-ton-gladhá obj., tu-táki-tu-kladhá rest.; o-kírioz-makrís subj., ton-gírio-makrí obj., tu-kirtu-makrí rest., ktrie-makrí add.). There are a few family names like khristofóru or adhamandíu which are invariable in form. For the use of the article with names see Comment 2 of Unit 15.

(2) Women's names.

i-ána-i-kladhá	Anne Kladas	i-kirta-burbúli	Mrs. Bourboulis
i-dhespinís-kladhá	Miss Kladas	i-pópi-i-roilú	Pope Roilos
i-marta-i-burbúli	Mary Bourboulis	i-fróso-i-adhamandíu	Phroso Adamantiou

In the case of women, married or unmarried, the family name stands in the restrictive case. That is, i-marta-i-burbúli is 'Mary the (wife) of Bourboulis', and i-ána-i-kladhá is 'Anne the (daughter) of Kladas'; similarly mya- burbúli is 'a female of the Bourboulis family' in the sentence enas-adherfós-tu-patéra-mu ine-pandreménos me-mya-burbúli "One of my father's brothers is married to a Bourboulis." Thus in women's names the family name is invariable in form. To some degree women's last names (except those ending in unaccented -u) appear to be appositives: i-ána-i-kladhá seems to be a feminine counterpart to the masculine o-tákis-o-kladhás.

(c) NAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

o-amerikanós-próksenos	the American consul
i-élinez-náftes	the Greek sailors enas-túrkos-émboros	a Turkish merchant

In phrases like these, in which a person's nationality is given as well as his position or occupation, Greek uses a noun of nationality (e.g. o-amerikanós 'the American' enas-túrkos 'a Turk') with a noun of occupation in apposition to it. In other words, adjectives of nationality (e.g. amerikanikós 'American', elinikós 'Greek', túrkikos 'Turkish') are not used with nouns of occupation.

Ὁ γέρο—Γιάννης; Δὲν τά 'βγανε πέρα μόνος του.
Τὸ χτῆμα του, βλέπεις, ἦτανε μικρό, λίγα στρέμματα μόνο,
κι ὁ γέρο—Γιάννης ἦτανε τεμπέλης.
Ζοῦσ' ἀπ' τὰ λεφτὰ ποὺ ἔκανε ἡ γυναῖκα του.
Ἦτανε δουλεύτρα γυναῖκα ἡ Μαρία.
Πήγαινε τὸ χειμῶνα καὶ δούλευε στὸ σπίτι τοῦ κουμπάρου τους στὴν Ἀθήνα.

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

COMMENT 1

Conjunctions. Words like ke 'and', ómos 'however', yati 'because', otan 'when', which serve to connect sentences or parts of sentences, are called conjunctions. Some of these are simple (e.g. ke), others compound (e.g. an-ge 'although', os-pu-na 'until'); some are unaccented (e.g. opos 'in the way in which; as'), others accented (e.g. ópos 'in whatever way; however'). Conjunctions differ considerably from each other as to the elements they connect: thus ke may connect any elements at all (words, phrases, clauses, sentences); ómos usually connects a whole sentence with the preceding one; otan introduces a clause, which it connects with the rest of the sentence. A sharp division of the Greek conjunctions into coordinating (connecting elements that stand on a par with each other) and subordinating (connecting one element with another of higher order) is hard to establish (as in the cases of ke, yati, etc.).

It is even difficult to draw the line between conjunction and preposition in Greek in certain cases. Thus, you have studied san 'like' (Unit 14, Comment 2) as a preposition, followed by the object case (e.g. milti-elinikâ san-don-adherfó-mu "You speak Greek like my brother."). But if you consider an example like s-emâs-o-ntkos férthike-san-adherfós "Nick acted like a brother toward us," you will see that san may also be followed by the subject case. The fact is that (as in the last example, or as in ones like ton-tkhame san-adherfó "We considered him as a brother" or ton-aghapúse san-don-tdhyo-ton-adherfó-tu "He loved him as [he did] his own brother.") in general the noun or pronoun after san stands in the case that is required by the verb; but a pronoun, or a noun preceded by the definite article, may stand in the object case independently of what would be required by the verb (as in the earlier example milti-elinikâ san-don-adherfó-mu). Similarly, an instance like pái-ya-vulefti's "He's running for (member of) the Chamber of Deputies" shows that the noun vulefti's which follows ya does not depend on ya but rather stands in the case required by the verb.

Since the use of certain conjunctions is very simple and presents nothing in the way of a problem, this Comment will be restricted to the conjunctions you have met so far that introduce verbs, for these are the ones you will need to study particularly. (We shall not take up the relative words pu, oti, óti, ópyos, ósos which have been treated earlier.) The best system of presenting these conjunctions seems to be an arrangement according to the possible use or non-use of the perfective dependent after them. (By this we do not mean the perfective dependent preceded by tha.) We therefore arrange them here in three sections: (a) conjunctions that do not take the perfective dependent; (b) conjunctions that may take the perfective dependent; (c) conjunctions that must take the perfective dependent. The order of treatment is alphabetical within a given section.

Digitized by Google

(a) CONJUNCTIONS THAT DO NOT TAKE THE PERFECTIVE DEPENDENT. In clauses introduced by these conjunctions the imperfective or perfective past is employed for actions in the past, the imperfective present for actions in the present, and the imperfective or perfective future (with tha) for actions in the future.

1. afu 'since'

kalá-lipón, afu-to-thélete ke-dhén-ipárchi-álo-méso . . . Very well, then, since you will have it so, and there's no other way . . .

2. an-ge 'although; though; even if' an-g-in-arghá eláte-na-saz-dhíkso-to-naó-tiz-níkis. Even if it is late, let me show you the Temple of Victory.

3. ap-oti 'than' (see Unit 20, Comment 2)

4. eno 'while; whereas'

i-mikhálena-tóte pái-ke-psonízi-oti-khriázete eno-o-mikhális-kuvendyázi i-pézi-khartyá-me-tus-flus-tu. Then['s when] Michalena goes and does the necessary buying, while Michales talks or plays cards with his friends.

5. kathos 'as' (manner)

i-pelopóniso i-o-moryás kathoz-léme-s-ti-ghlósa-tu-laú the Peloponnese, or the Morea, as we say in the language of the people

6. ke (see Unit 26, Comment 1)

7. opos 'as' (manner)

o-romyós opos-tone-parasténi-o-romyós the Greek as the Greeks represent him

8. opu '(there) where'

i-meryá-tu-uranú opu-vyéni-o-flyos the part (or quarter) of the sky where the sun comes up

9. óso 'as long as'

óso-ergházese mi-fováse-típota. — As long as you work you have nothing to be afraid of ('do not fear anything').

óso-píyene chirotéreve. — As time went on he got worse and worse.

10. pos 'that'

eghó-to-kséro pos-itan-o-yánis pu . . . — I know that it was John who . . .

élegha poz-dhulévi-arghá. — I thought he worked ('works') late.

dhe-fováse pos-tha-se-skotósune-k-eséna? — Aren't you afraid they'll kill you, too?

This conjunction is the one regularly employed to introduce indirect statements or thoughts. You have met it after kséro 'I know', léo 'I say; I think', arnyéme 'I deny', pistévo 'I believe', nomízo 'I think', skéftome 'I consider', fénete 'it seems', vrísko 'I find', fovúme 'I fear'. (For the use of na after some of these same verbs where possibility rather than fact is expressed see Unit 25, Comment 1.) As you can see from the second example above, in clauses of this kind there is no tendency in Greek, as there is in English, for the verb to be affected in tense by the main verb of the sentence.

11. yatí 'because; for'

aftós-o-tídhyos dhe-skotónete-poté-apo-tus-túrkus, yatí-dhem-byánete-poté. — He himself never gets killed by the Turks, because he never lets himself get caught.

(b) CONJUNCTIONS THAT MAY TAKE THE PERFECTIVE DEPENDENT. In clauses introduced by these conjunctions the imperfective or perfective past is employed for actions in the past; for actions which are not past, Greek uses either the imperfective present or the perfective dependent.

1. afú 'after'

trighái-ta-stafúlya ky-afu-ta-triytsi ta-patái. — He picks the grapes, and after he picks them he treads them out.

2. an 'if' (see Unit 22, Comment 2)

3. kathos 'as; when' kathos-ftáso tha-páo-na-tone-dhó. When I get there, I'll go and see him.

kathoz-bís tha-tine-dhís. As you go in you'll see her.

4. mólis 'as soon as'

yirtzi-spíti-tu mólis-o-tíyoz-vasilépsi. He goes back to the ('his') house as soon as the sun goes down.

5. na 'that' (see Unit 25, Comment 1)

6. ópos 'in whatever way; as'

ópos-orízis kirá-mu. Whatever you say, ma'am.

káme ópo-su-fanís. Do just as you think best ('as it seems to you').

7. ópu 'wherever'

ópu-stathís ky-ópu-vrethís pandú-vlépiz-yíro-su ti-ghalaní-tis-omorfyá. Wherever you happen to be (and wherever you find yourself) you will see its azure beauty all about you.

8. ópu-ky-an 'in any place at all where; wherever' ópu-ky-am-báne vrískete-mármaro-s-tin-atikí. Wherever you go in Attica you find marble.

ópu-ky-an-gitákso vlépo-steryá. Wherever I look I see (dry) land.

The combination ky-an may be added to any indefinite relative word except otan to make it still more indefinite; thus also ópos-ky-an 'in any way at all in which; however', ópyos-ky-an 'anyone at all who; whoever', óti-ky-an 'anything at all that; whatever', etc.

9. os-pu-na 'until; before'* tha-perásune-kána-dhyó-leftá os-pu-na-to-ksanakhtíptsi. There'll be ('will pass') a minute or two [yet] before he rings it again.

* Actions in the past are introduced by os-pu (instead of os-pu-na).

piyéname-polí-ghlíghora, otan-éksafna stamátise-to-tréno. — We were making very good time, when all of a sudden the train stopped.

otan-aftós-érchete, eghó-févgho. — When he comes, I leave.

otan-érthete-to-chimóna-s-tin-athína tha-saz-dhíkso-káti. — When you come to Athens this winter, I'll show you something.

11. para-na 'than' * (see Unit 21, Comment 1)

12. prin 'before'

o-mikhális sikónete-proí-proí pri-vyí-o-ílyos. — Michales gets up bright and early, before sunup ('before the sun comes out').

13. san 'as; when'

to-chinóporo san-apovréksi pái-ky-orghóni-to-khoráfi-tu. — In the fall when it stops raining, he goes and plows his land.

14. ya-na 'in order that' (see Unit 25, Comment 1)

(c) CONJUNCTIONS THAT MUST TAKE THE PERFECTIVE DEPENDENT.

1. min (after words of precaution) 'that . . . not'

prosochí-mim-bésete! — Be careful (that) you don't fall!

COMMENT 2

HOW TO EXPRESS PROBABILITY.

(a) BY THE USE OF tha.

* Comparisons in the past are introduced by other conjunctions, e.g. by ap-otí.

dhé-su-ánikse? tha-kimótan-akóma.

Didn't he open [the door] for you? He was probably still asleep.

a-dhén-trthe-tsa-me-tóra tha-ptye-me-kati-archeológhu-s-to-dhafní.

If he hasn't come by now, he must have gone with some archeologists to Daphni.

Besides its use in the future (see Unit 10, Comment 2) and the conditional (see Unit 22, Comment 3) tha has another function, which comes out in the sentences above. It may express probability (1) in the present, when combined with an imperfective present, or (2) in the past, when combined with either an imperfective past or a perfective past, depending on the type of action involved: thus tha-kimâte 'he's probably asleep; he must be asleep', tha-kimótane 'he was probably asleep; he must have been asleep', tha-kimíthike 'he probably slept; he must have slept'.

(b) BY THE USE OF prépi-na.

prépi-ná-ne-lambrós-áthropos-o-spíros.

He must be a mighty fine fellow — Spyros.

aftós-o-naós-parabrós me-to-aëtoma prépi-ná-n-o-parthenónas.

That temple up ahead with the pediment must be the Parthenon.

The verb prépi, like our word 'must', may indicate what is probable. Like tha the group prépi-na may combine with the imperfective present, the imperfective past, or the perfective past: thus prépi-na-kimâte 'it must be that he is asleep; he must be asleep', prépi-na-kimótane 'it must be that he was asleep; he must have been asleep', prépi-na-kimíthike 'it must be that he slept; he must have slept'.

COMMENT 3

INTERJECTIONS. The term interjection is applied to a great variety of expressions, whether single words, phrases, or even short sentences, ranging from elemental outcries (e.g. ó! 'oh!') and answers (e.g. vévea 'sure!') through exclamatory comments (e.g. dhóksa-si-o-theós! 'thank God!'), directions (e.g. apo-dhó! 'this way!'), and commands (e.g. stâsu! 'stop!') to greetings (e.g. chérete 'hello') and addresses (e.g. kirá-mu 'ma'am'). Of course, almost any word may be pronounced in an exclamatory tone. A survey of the interjections that you have met in the Units so far is presented in this Comment.

Τὰ φυλάνε μέσα στὸ Μουσεῖο τῆς 'Ακρόπολις μαζὶ μὲ ἄλλα ἀρχαῖα.
Δὲν πήγατε νὰ τὰ δῆτε;
Ὄχι.
Τότε δὲ θὰ εἴδατε βέβαια καὶ τὰ ἀγάλματα ποὺ ἔχουν ἐκεῖ ἀπ' ἀρχαιότερους ναούς.
Ὄχι.
Δὲν εἴδατε τὴν αἴθουσα μὲ τὶς κόρες.
Ὄχι.
Κρῖμας.
Δὲν εἴχαμε καιρό.
Τὸ μεσημέρι, βλέπετε, κλειοῦνε τὴν 'Ακρόπολι.
Κι ὁ φύλακας κόντεψε νὰ φύγῃ πρὶ βγοῦμε.
Δὲ χτύπησε τὸ κουδούνι;
Τὸ χτύπησε καὶ τὸ ξαναχτύπησε.
Μὰ ἐγὼ δὲν ἤθελα νὰ φύγω ἀπ' τὴν 'Ακρόπολι, τόσο μοῦ ἄρεσε ἐκεῖ πάνω.

2. Now you talk about Greek art.

Προτιμήσατε λοιπὸν νὰ ἐπισκεφτῆτε αὐτὸ τὸ μοναστήρι μὲ τὰ βυζαντινὰ μωσαϊκὰ καὶ τοὺς φράγκικους τάφους παρὰ νὰ ἔρθετε μαζί μας στὴν Ἀκρόπολι.

Εἶμαι, βλέπετε, Ρωμιός.

Ἀγαπῶ τὴ σημερινὴ λαϊκὴ τέχνη, πού 'ναι μιὰ συνέχεια τῆς βυζαντινῆς.

Ἡ βυζαντινὴ τέχνη δὲ μοῦ φαίνεται ξένη.

Ἀπ' αὐτήνε δὲ μὲ χωρίζουνε τόσοι αἰῶνες ὅσοι μὲ χωρίζουν ἀπὸ τὴν ἀρχαία.

Ὁ σημερνὸς Ἕλληνας, πά' νὰ πῇ, δὲ βλέπει τὴν ὁμορφιὰ τῆς Ἀκρόπολις;

Τήνε βλέπει, μὰ τήνε βλέπει μὲ τὸ μάτι τοῦ Ρωμιοῦ, κι ὄχι μὲ τὸ μάτι τοῦ Περικλῆ

ἢ μὲ τὸ μάτι τοῦ ξένου ποὺ ἔρχεται ἀπὸ τὴν Εὐρώπη ἢ ἀπὸ τὴν Ἀμερική.

Μὴν ξεχνᾶτε πὼς ὁ Παρθενῶνας ἦταν ἐκκλησιὰ κάτω ἀπ' τοὺς Βυζαντινούς, καὶ πὼς ἡ Ἀκρόπολι ἦτανε κάστρο κάτω ἀπ' τοὺς Τούρκους.

Τὸ Ἐρέχθειο μὲ τὴν ὡραία στοά του μᾶς κάνει καὶ θυμούμαστε τοὺς Τούρκους καὶ ὄχι τοὺς ἀρχαίους Ἕλληνες.

1. Word Study

Word formation. The purpose of this Comment is to examine the patterns of relationship between the words of a given word-family. Consider, for example, the following set: áspros 'white', kátaspros 'pure white', asprízo 'I whiten; I become white', asprórukha 'white underwear, bed-linen, and table linen' ('white clothes'). When you compare áspros with kátaspros, you see that the initial element kat- is attached to the whole word áspros; such an inseparable element added to the beginning of a word is called a prefix. The words áspros, asprízo, asprórukha all have the element aspr- in common; such an element is called an underlying form. The adjective áspros contains the underlying form aspr- plus the inseparable element -os, and the verb asprízo contains the underlying form aspr- plus the inseparable element -ízo; such inseparable elements added to the end of the underlying form are called suffixes. Finally, the word asprórukha is composed of the underlying form aspr- and the word rúkha tied by the connecting vowel o; such a combination is called a compound. For the understanding of words which are compounds or which contain a suffix it is highly important to know what the underlying form is. Normally this is fairly simple: to arrive at the underlying form of a given set it is necessary to isolate what is common to the members of that set (provided that you do not remove from any one of the members less than what you have learned as an ending). Naturally, the underlying form may change from set to set: thus in the set fóvos 'fear' and foverós 'terrible' the underlying form is fov-, whereas in the set foverós and fovertzo 'I threaten' the underlying form is fover-.

There are, however, cases in which it is not so easy to find the underlying form. When the underlying form to which a given suffix is to be attached is a verb-stem, you have to know from which of the different verb-stems formation proceeds: thus the suffix -átos is to be attached to the imperfective stem, minus any suffix (e.g. trekhátos 'running', from stem trekh-; khortátos 'stuffed (with food)', from the suffixless stem khort- of khorténo 'I stuff'); the suffixes -si, -simo, and -syá are to be attached to the perfective stem of the -o type, minus any final s or n (e.g. ániksi 'spring (of the year)', from stem aniks-; rápsimo 'sewing', from stem raps-; zestasyá 'pleasing warmth', from stem zestan-); the suffixes -tós, -tó, -tis, and -tra are to be attached to the perfective stem of the -me type, minus any final t or th (e.g. anikhtós 'open; not locked', from stem anikht-; ghrafító 'destiny', from stem ghraf-; ráftis 'tailor' and ráftra 'seam-stress', from stem raft-); the suffixes -ma and -mós are to be attached to the basis of the participle in -ménos (e.g. ghráma 'letter', from the basis ghra-; logharyazmós 'bill; check', from the basis logharyaz-). When formation proceeds from a noun-stem, the underlying form sometimes corresponds to the plural minus final -es (in masculines or feminines) or -a (in neuters): thus the suffix -iko in psomádhiko 'bakery' is attached to psomadh-, which underlies psomádhes, plural of psomás 'baker'; the suffix -yá in fotyá 'fire' is attached to fot-, which underlies fóta, plural of fós 'light'; the suffix -ényos in tenekedhényos '(made) of tin' is attached to tenekedh-, which underlies tenekédhes, plural of tenekés 'tin'; similarly, the first element ghramat- in the compound ghramatósimo 'stamp' corresponds to the underlying form of ghrámata, plural of ghráma 'letter'. Occasionally in word formation one must reckon with the loss of an unaccented initial vowel: e.g. ksipnó 'I wake up' beside éksipnos 'awake; bright', or lyopíri n. 'extreme heat of the sun' beside élyos 'sun'.

(a) SUFFIXES. A suffix may be identical with what you have learned as an ending, e.g. -os in áspros 'white'; it may be a combination of some element plus an ending, e.g. -ízo in asprízo 'I whiten'. In the list that follows we shall take up only those suffixes which contain an element before the ending, with the exception of the personal suffix -ás, the augmentative suffix -a, and the verb suffix -ó. In length the great majority of Greek suffixes range from one to three syllables (e.g. -tís, -áris, -áriko). Some suffixes are accented; some are unaccented. In meaning some suffixes are quite definite, like -íko 'place of such-and-such business', -ára 'coin worth so many lepta'; others, however, are so vague that we can only show how they function, like -ízo making verbs from the stems of nouns or adjectives. Not all the suffixes listed below are of equal vitality. For example, the very frequent suffix -si (as in óreksi 'appetite') is no longer used by the average speaker in the formation of new words; -áki on the other hand, may be added to the stem of great numbers of nouns to make diminutives (e.g. spitáki 'little house' beside spíti 'house').

d. -ízo: adhinatízo 'I get weak', aksízi 'it is worth', archízo 'I begin', chyonízi 'it snows', dhanízo 'I lend', elpízo 'I hope', kapnízo 'I smoke', katharízo 'I clean', khorízo 'I separate', kostízi 'it costs', ksurízo 'I shave (someone)', mavrízo 'I get black', nomízo 'I think', orízo 'I command', psifízo 'I vote', psonízo 'I purchase supplies', schimatízo 'I form', skotízo 'I bother', thertzo 'I harvest', yalízo 'I shine', yemízo 'I fill', yirízo 'I return; I come back'.

e. -ó, -úme, -yéme: aghapó 'I love', filó 'I kiss', fovúme 'I fear', ikonomó 'I save up', krató 'I hold', khtipó 'I strike; I ring', ksipnó 'I wake up', lipúme 'I am sorry', metró 'I measure; I count', miló 'I speak', nikó 'I win', perpató 'I walk', pidhó 'I jump', pinó 'I am hungry', polemó 'I fight', thimúme 'I remember', tilefonó 'I telephone', traghudhó 'I sing', trighó 'I pick (of grapes, etc.)', varyéme 'I am bored', voithó 'I help', yenó 'I give birth to; I lay (of eggs)'.

f. -óno: elatóno 'I diminish', enóno 'I unite', faneróno 'I make evident', fitróno 'I sprout; I grow', krióno 'I catch cold', mazóno 'I collect', orghóno 'I plow', sidheróno 'I iron', skotóno 'I kill', telyóno 'I end'.

(b) PREFIXES. In most cases prefixes are simply attached to a whole word. In some instances, however, prefixes are attached to an underlying form, e.g. ámyalos 'foolish' consisting of the prefix a- plus the underlying form myal- (cf. myaló 'brain') plus the adjectival ending -os. Greek has relatively few really living prefixes, that is, prefixes capable of being freely used by the ordinary speaker in making up new words as he talks. It is these prefixes only which are illustrated in the list that follows. In the word material of this Manual you have probably noticed a great many other prefixes besides those listed here (e.g. pros- in prosékho 'I am careful' beside ékho 'I have', or epi- in episkéftome 'I visit' beside skéftome 'I consider') or the same prefixes (as are on the list) used in a different way (e.g. kata- in katalavéno 'I understand' beside lavéno 'I receive'), but these features are rather frozen than liquid assets of the present spoken language.

1. a- (before a consonant), an- (before a vowel) 'not; un-; -less': antsikhos 'not quiet; uneasy; restless', apéndaros 'penniless'.
2. apo- (before a verb) Indicating completion: apocherettzo 'I say good-bye to', apovréchi 'it stops raining'. (before a noun) 'remnant of': apotstgharo 'cigarette butt'.
3. kata- (before consonant or vowel), kat- (before a vowel only) 'completely': kátaspros 'pure white'.
4. ksana- 'again; re-': ksanakhtipó 'I strike again; I ring again'.

5. kse- (before a consonant), ks- (before a vowel) 'out; dis-; un-': ksekhortzo 'I distinguish; I am different'.
6. para- (before consonant or vowel), par- (before a vowel only) Indicating higher degree, excess, or error, 'over-'; 'mis-': parabrós 'farther ahead', pŕapoli 'very much; extremely', parakúo 'I hear wrongly', parakséro 'I know thoroughly', paranikó 'I win a complete victory' (verbs containing para- 'completely; decidedly' occur chiefly in such repetitions as tha-niksi ke-tha-paraniksi "It will not only win, it will win hands down," tokséro ke-to-parakséro "Sure, I know that.").

(c) COMPOUNDS. A compound is usually a combination of two (or more) significant elements, which are referred to as the members of the compound. According to the relation in meaning of the members to each other the compounds listed below are divided into two categories: (1) copulative, in which the members (as in macheropíruno 'knife and fork') may be thought of as connected by 'and'; and (2) determinative, in which the first member defines the second (as in krevatokámara 'bedroom'). The exact relationships of the parts to each other are manifold; the types of compounds occurring in our material and treated here represent only a portion of the many types that exist. The compound word as a whole may be a noun (e.g. sidheródhromos 'railroad'), an adjective (e.g. kalókardhos 'goodhearted'), an adverb (e.g. meronikhtís 'day and night'), a numeral (e.g. dheká-ksi 'sixteen'), or a verb (e.g. kalokáthome 'I sit comfortably').

There are a small number of compounds in Greek which represent phrases whose parts have simply grown together, with the first member standing permanently in the case-form in which it, or the whole compound, is (or was) most frequently used. Examples of these, classed according to the case in which the first member stands, are: 1. (restrictive case) khristúyena 'Christmas', literally 'Christ's birth' (khristú being the restrictive case of khristós); 2. (object case) plati-yalós 'Broad Beach'; 3. (case of address) barbayánis '"Uncle" John', yero-mikhális 'Old Michales', kirafróso 'Mistress Phroso', kir-yánis 'Mr. John' (this last with loss of the ending of the first member).

Aside from a few such instances as the preceding, a compound is usually a combination having the sequence: underlying form 1 + connecting vowel + underlying form 2 + ending. The connecting vowel is almost invariably o, e.g. krevatokámara 'bedroom'. When the stem of an adjective in -ís (polís, varís, makrís, etc.) serves as underlying form 1 in a compound, sometimes the connecting vowel is i, as in varichimonyá 'hard winter'. Finally, in this situation the numerals from five to twelve usually have a as the connecting vowel, e.g. pendámorfos (composed of pend- and omorf-) 'very beautiful' ('five times beautiful'); as first members of compounds the underlying forms for the numerals below five are mono-, dhi-, tri-, tetra-. When the second member of a compound begins with a vowel, the connecting vowel often runs together with it, as in pendámorfos, aghriáthropos 'uncouth fellow' (compare ághrios 'wild' and áthropos 'fellow'), protópe 'he said . . . for the first time' (beside protoípe); when this happens, it takes place according to the same rules that you learned (in the Hints on Pronunciation of Units 2 and 11) for the running together of words in a closely knit phrase. As for the accent or the ending of a compound no summary statement can be made. In the list that follows, the symbols N, A, Num, V will be used for noun, adjective, numeral, and verb, respectively, in representing the members of compounds.

(1) COPULATIVE.

1. Noun

NN ambelokhórafa n.p. 'fields and vineyards'.

2. Adjective

AA kokinoktírinos 'reddish-yellow'.

3. Verbs

VV benovyéno 'I go in and out', piyenoérkhome 'I come and go'.

(2) DETERMINATIVE.

1. Nouns

a. NN ghramatósimo '(postage) stamp' ('letter-mark'), khartonómizma n. 'paper money', khristúyena n.p. 'Christmas' ('Christ's birth'), podhófreno 'footbrake', sidheródhromos 'railroad' ('iron road'), stafidhoparaghoyí f. 'currant production', vunokorfí f. 'mountain peak'.

b. NN (with the second member determining the first, the compound as a whole taking the gender and number of the first member): ponokéfalos 'headache', ponólemos 'sore throat'.

c. NN (the first noun giving a person's age or status): barba-yánis '"Uncle" John', kir-yánis 'Mr. John', kira-fróso 'Mistress Phroso' yero-mikhális 'Old Michales'.

3. What Would You Say?

I. 1. Beside psomí 'bread' you have psomás 'baker'. Knowing the words psári, krasí, karékla, kapélo form the Greek occupational names for 'fisherman', 'wine merchant', 'chairmaker', 'hatter'.

2. Form diminutives in -áki to the words pedhí, machéri, chéri, maghazí, korítsi.

3. Form diminutives in -úla to the words adherfí, várka, pórta, pópi, vrísi.

4. The wife of andónis is called andónena. What would the wives of kóstas, yánis, mikhális, pétros be called?

5. A 'group of ten' is called dhekaryá, with the suffix -aryá. What would a 'group of fifteen, twenty, fifty, two hundred' be called?

6. If ghrápsimo means '(action of) writing', what is the meaning of pyásimo, péksimo, dhyóksimo, klápsimo, kápsimo?

7. Give the meaning of the following adjectives in -ikós: anatolikós, dhitikós, elinikós, athlitikós, ghlosikós.

8. If marmarénya-skála means 'marble stairs', what is the meaning of sidherénya-pórta, papútsya-lastichénya, dulápa-kiparisénya?

9. Form verbs in -ízo to the words archí, katharós, mávros, áspros, pstfos. What is the meaning of these verbs?

10. The verb palyóno, beside palyós 'old', means 'I make old' and 'I get old'. Form verbs in -óno to the following words and point out their double meaning: pághos, steghnós, krío, meghálos.

11. The verb zesténo, beside zestós 'warm', means 'I make warm' and 'I get warm'. Form verbs in -éno to the following adjectives and point out their double meaning: makrís, mikrós, kondós, pachís, platís.

12. The following words begin with a- 'un-': ápsikhos 'soulless', apéndaros 'penniless', adhínatos 'weak', akhromátistos 'uncolored'. To what words would you relate these formations?

13. Point out the meaning of the two parts in each of the following words: katalipiménos 'deeply grieved', ksekurázo 'I refresh', ksanalého 'I repeat', parakáno 'I overdo'.

14. What two words are you reminded of in each of the following compounds: ambelokhórafa, ponokéfalos, palyáthropos, kokinokítrinos, benovyéno?

15. What two words are you reminded of in each of the following compounds: macheropíruno 'knife and fork', krevatokámara 'bedroom', palyópedho 'young rowdy', ghlikofiló 'I kiss tenderly'?

II. Here are a few characteristic Greek riddles. The riddles are numbered, the solutions are lettered: match riddles and solutions. In the riddles there are four words that you have not met in the preceding Units; they are: ápsikhos 'soulless', kalóyeros 'monk', khrisopsálidho 'golden scissors', psalídhi 'scissors'.

Section B—Word Study and Review of Basic Sentences

1. Word Study

Word order. Although Greek speakers may use a good deal of freedom in the arrangement of words in a sentence, the fact remains that certain sequences of words are much more frequent than others, so that there is definitely such a thing as a normal order of words in Greek. For some elements there is a completely fixed pattern, e.g. preposition + article + noun (s-tin-eksochí 'in the country') or affirmative imperative + unaccented indirect object pronoun + unaccented direct object pronoun (filaksé-mu-ta "Keep them for me."). Other elements tend to occur so often in a given position that by displacing them from this favorite position the speaker secures the effect of emphasis or liveliness: consider the nuance of the sequence noun object + predicate, as in to-krasáki-mu-thélo "It's my (dear) wine that I want," which departs from the common sequence predicate + noun object, as in thélo-to-krasáki-mu "I want my wine." The aim of this Comment is to treat the principal features of normal word order. We shall take up first the position of subject and object, then the position of certain types of words.

Digitized by Google

(a) SUBJECT AND PREDICATE. In the sentence o-mikhális pézi-khartyá-me-tus-fílus-tu "Michales plays cards with his friends" we designate o-mikhális, which answers the question 'who (or what) does?' as the subject, and pézi, which answers the question 'does what?' as the predicate. We are concerned here with sentences in which the subject is expressed, whether it is a noun (e.g. mikhális), a pronoun (e.g. aftós 'he'), or a clause (e.g. ópyos-théli 'whoever wants to').

(1) In simple statements and after the conjunction pos 'that'.

o-yánis pái-s-to-tiléfono.	John goes to the telephone.
kápyos-mu-éghrapse.	Somebody wrote to me.
ópyo-sas-tó-p-aftó káthete-ke-milí-ya-prámata pu-dhén-da-kséri.	Whoever told you that is simply talking ('sits and talks') of things he doesn't know [anything] about.
k-eghó-élegha pos-ta-étima ine-kalítera.	I [always] thought that the ready-made ones were ('are') better.

The above examples are typical of what may be called matter-of-fact statements, and in such statements the order is regularly: subject + predicate. The same order is very often found in clauses introduced by pos 'that', as in the last example above.

Now observe the following examples:

pái zvísane-ky-aftá.	Now even they are gone ('have gone out').
tha-saz-dhí-o-adherfós-mu.	My brother will see you. (Spoken as a warning.)
trthe-o-pólemos.	[Then] came the War.
mu-trthe-mya-idhéa.	I just got an idea. ('An idea came to me.') to-kapélo-mu! to-ptír-o-aéras!	My hat! The wind just carried it off!
ma-se-ksékhase-aftós-tóra.	But he's forgotten you by now.
mú-pane pos-aróstise-o-leonídhas.	Someone ('They') told me Leonidas had been taken sick.

In contrast to the examples of deliberate, matter-of-fact statement cited earlier, those given here are either of an impromptu character or convey some degree of emotion, emphasis (whether upon subject or predicate), or the narrator's interest in his story. In such statements the order is regularly: predicate + subject.

But this order, predicate + subject, may also be found in examples of a different sort:

a-dhén-do-pire dhé-tha-tu-perásun-i-póni.
If he hasn't taken it (his medicine), the pain isn't going to go away ('the pains will not pass from him').

óso-ipárchi-andipolítefsi tha-dhiatiriht-to-dhimokratikó-pnévma tu-elinikú-laú.
As long as there is an opposition party, the democratic spirit of the Greek people will be preserved.

itan-o-yánis pu-tin-érikse-mésa-s-ti-thálasa.
It was John who threw her into the sea.

dhén-ine-móno-i-fróso pu-me-káni-n-aghapó-tin-eládha.
It isn't only Phroso that makes me love Greece.

At this tavern you can get good food ('one eats well').

échi-álo-trêno ya-ti-salonîki? — né, févyi-ena-se-ligha-leftá.
Is there another train to Salonica? — Yes, there's one leaving in a few minutes.

Here there are reasons of form rather than meaning for the order predicate + subject: in the first two examples this order in the main clause (tha-perásun-i-póni and tha-dhiatiriht-to-pnévma) is due to the fact that a dependent clause precedes; the next two examples (itan-o-yánis and ine-i-fróso) present the set phrase of emphasis ine + subject + pu (or a variation of it); as to the last two examples above, a few indefinite pronoun subjects like kanénas or enas 'one; a person' normally follow the predicate.

(2) In questions and after most conjunctions.

1. Questions.

ksetastîkane-ta-baúla-tu-kirîu?
Have the gentleman's bags been inspected?

tha-flyi-amésos-aftó-to-ghráma?
Will this letter go out right away?

kséro-k-eghó?
How should I know? ('Do I know?')

pú-n-dos?
Where is he?

pós-tine-vrtski-tin-éleni-o-tákis? What does Takes think of ('How does Takes find') Helen?
yatí-dhe-fovâse-k-esí? Why aren't you afraid?
dhen-gzéri-ti-tha-pi-sinâchi. He doesn't know what a cold is.
ya-dhés-ton-gaterghári pos-kóvi-to-myaló-tul Boy, what a keen brain the rascal has! ('Just see the rascal, how his brain cuts!')

In questions the normal order is: predicate + subject. This holds whether the question is a direct one or, as in the last two examples, depends on another verb. The rule does not work in cases like pyós-kséri? "Who knows?", in which the interrogative word is the subject and yet precedes the predicate.

Here are examples of the reverse order (subject + predicate), emphasizing the subject:

ke-i-yinékes dhém-bâne-s-to-bányo? And the women don't go bathing?
o-simernós-élinas-panapí dhé-vlépi-tin-omorfyá-tis-akrópolis? You mean that a Greek of the present day doesn't see the beauty of the Acropolis?
pósuz-mínes-o-pétros iche-na-dhí-to-yáni? How many months had it been since Peter had seen John?
pósa-khrónya-o-yánis ine-meghaliterós-tu? How many years older is John than he?
ky-o-dhikó-su-o-patéras pú-péthane? And where did your father die?
k-eséna t-arkhondopulú-su tí-káni? And how's the ('your') young master doing?

The subject may be put quite early in the question, sometimes even before an interrogative word or phrase. In such cases the subject is pronounced with the tone of a question and with a slight pause following.

2. After conjunctions.

dhé-thélo-na-to-kséri-i-mitéra. I don't want Mother to know (it).
prépi-na-katevâne-i-áli-epivátes. The other passengers have to get off.
tí-ghlíghora pu-pâi-to-vapóri! The ship's really making headway now. ('How fast the ship is going!') an-gáni-pánda-tu oti-théli-aftós	if he always does [just] what he wants to tus-káni ke-skotóni-o-énas-ton-álone.	He gets them to kill each other. ('He makes them and the one kills the other.') ghítghora-moré-pedhyá k-érchete-to-vapóri.	Quick, fellows, the boat's coming.

óso-dhulévo-ghó dhe-fovúme-típota.	As long as I [can] work, I'm not afraid of anything.
a-su-kopí-ena-chéri	if you lose ('there is cut off to you') a hand
pri-vyí-o-flyos	before the sun comes up ('out')

After most conjunctions the normal order is: predicate + subject. Examples in which the subject comes between conjunction and predicate are rare (e.g. mólis-o-flyos-vasilépsi 'as soon as the sun goes down', otan-esí píz-na-tis-filísis 'when you go to kiss them', an-enas-álhropos anévene-éksafna s-to-parathiró-mu 'if a man were to come up to my window all of a sudden'). Under no condition may this happen in a clause introduced by na. Notice, therefore, the position of the subject of a na-clause when it is displaced for emphasis:

thélo-o-énas na-mu-kathartsi-ta-áspra-mu-papútsya ky-o-álos na-mu-yaltsi-ta-mávra.	I want the one to clean my white shoes for me and the other to shine my black ones.
k-eghó-prépi-na-fígho-se-líghus-mínes.	I have to leave in a few months, too.
ta-ála prépi-na-mínun-edhó.	The other ones have to stay here.
k-esí na-me-thimáse-pánda.	And you must remember me always.

As you see, in these cases the subject stands just before na or before a verb introducing na.

(b) OBJECT AND PREDICATE. In this section of the Comment we are concerned only with accented objects of verbs; unaccented (pronoun) objects will be treated later.

échiz-ghrámata-ya-más?	Have you got any letters for us?
mín-do-lét-aftó.	Don't say that.
yatí-dhe-stélnis-oti-thélis-aeroporikós?	Why not send it ('what you want') airmail?

éfera-tis-andónenas mya-bottílya-ládhi.	I brought Antonena a bottle of olive oil.
yatí-dhe-mu-ztise-eména-leftá?	Why didn't he ask me for money?

The normal order is: predicate + accented object. This holds whether the object is a noun (e.g. ghrámata 'letters'), a pronoun (e.g. aftó 'that'), or a clause (e.g. oti-thélis 'what you want'). The rule does not work in cases like tí-su-ghráfi? "What does he write to you?", in which the interrogative word is the object and yet precedes the predicate.

Where a predicate has both an indirect and a direct object, as in the above example éfera-tis-andónenas mya-bottílya-ládhi, the order is usually: indirect object + direct object.

The following are instances of the reverse order (object + predicate), emphasizing the object:

né, aftóne-thélo.	Yes, he's the one I want ('him I want').
óchi, ton-gafé-mu tone-thélo-tóra.	No, my coffee I want now.
aftá-echi-i-zoí.	Such is life. ('These things life has.') ton-gafé-su pós-tone-pínis?	How do you take ('drink') your coffee?
k-esás pó-saz-léne?	And what's your name ('how do they call you')?

As you see from the last two examples, the object may be placed even before an interrogative word.

(c) NOUNS DEPENDENT UPON NOUNS. Observe the position of the two nouns in each of the following examples:

to-bakáliko-tu-mavroyáni	Mavrogiannes's grocery store
mé-s-ti-mési-tu-dhrómu	right in the middle of the road
sardhéles-tu-kutyú	canned sardines ('sardines of the box')
i-kabínes tis-prótis-théseos	the first-class cabins

A noun in the restrictive case regularly follows the noun it restricts. An example in which emphasis causes the reverse order is tu-mítsu-i-petséta 'Metsos's towel'.

(d) ADJECTIVES.

1. Descriptive adjectives.

dhinatí-póni	severe pains	to-kalítero-ksenodhochío	the best hotel
kenúryi-dhrómi	new roads	to-oréo-to-klíma	the fine climate
ena-meghálo-khtírio	a big building

The normal order is: (article +) descriptive adjective + noun. Occasionally, as in the last example, the definite article is repeated before the noun.

Instances of the opposite order (noun + adjective) are:

sizítisi-politikí	political discussion
khóra-oriní	a mountainous country (or a country that is mountainous) aftós-o-athropákis o-khártinos	that little fellow made of paper
arní-psitó	roast lamb
ena-fortáki m-ena-fteró-spazméno	a Ford with one fender broken
yatróz-dhyavazméno	a physician [who is] very learned

In general the position of an adjective after a noun produces emphasis of the adjective. An adjective or participle so placed may have the force of a relative clause.

2. Demonstrative adjectives.

túti-i-tavérna	this tavern	aftó-to-áspro-khtírio	that white building
túti-dho-i-láma	this razor blade here	ekíno-to-meghálo-to-kutí	that large box
ekíno-ki-to-kyóski	that variety-stand there

The normal order is: demonstrative adjective + (demonstrative adverb +) definite article + noun (which may have a descriptive adjective before it).

3. álos.

dhóz-mu-ena-álo-vivlío.	Give me another (or a different) book.
dhóz-mu-álo-éna-vivlío.	Give me one more book.

In the combination álos plus numeral, álos means 'different' if it follows, but 'additional; more' if it precedes the numeral.

(e) PRONOUNS. In this section we shall deal only with unaccented personal pronouns.

1. Possessives.

kirá-mu	ma'am ('my mistress')
ta-leftá-su	your money
ta-chérya-tu	his hands

The order is: (definite article +) noun + possessive. Examples in which adjectives figure are:

óla-mu-ta-baúla	all my bags	i-móni-ma-solírta	our only hope ('salvation')
ma-kaló-mu-korítsil	But my dear girl!	ta-meghála-tus-ta-mátya	their big eyes
o-dhikó-su-o-patéras	your father

The normal order is: (definite article +) adjective + possessive + noun (which may have the article repeated before it).

2. Objects.

to-ksséro.	I know (it).
tha-ton-tádhane.	They must have seen him.
sas-arésune-ta-épipla?	Do you like the furniture?
mu-ta-dhínis-arghótera.	You can give them to me later on.
dhém-boró-na-sas-to-pó.	I can't tell you (it).

The order is invariably: unaccented pronoun object (or objects) + verb (except an affirmative imperative). Where a verb has both an indirect and a direct object, as in the last two examples, the order is invariably: indirect object + direct object.

Examples of objects of affirmative imperatives are:

pár-to.	Take it.
dhés-tone.	See him.
péz-mu-to.	Tell me (it).
filaksé-mu-ta.	Keep them for me.

The order is invariably: imperative + unaccented pronoun object (or objects). Where there is both an indirect and a direct object, the order, as in all other cases, is: indirect object + direct object.

(f) NEGATIVES.

1. Simple negatives.

dhén-da-kapnízo.	I don't smoke those.
ávrio dhé-tha-su-tilefonáso.	Tomorrow I'm not going to call you up ('telephone to you').
mín-dréchis-táso-ghlíghora.	Don't drive so fast.
to-móno-práma-pu-thélo ine-na-mín-do-máth-i-pópi.	The only thing I want [to make sure of] is that Pope doesn't find out [about] it.

The order is invariably: dhén + (tha +) (unaccented pronoun object or objects +) verb, or (na +) mín + (unaccented pronoun object or objects +) verb.

2. Negative combinations.

dhen-gzipnái-kanénas-ti-nikhta.	Nobody wakes up at night.
o-yánis-dhen-ípe-típota.	John didn't say anything.
dhé-mu-émine-leftó.	I haven't got a [single] penny left. ('There has not remained to me a lepton.')
dhén-do-kséro-akóma.	I don't know (it) yet.

dhé-thimúme-álo.	I don't remember any more.
dhem-bígha-poté-mónoz-mu.	I never went all by myself.
dhén-ikha-míte-ádhia mít-aftoktnito-dhikó-mu.	I didn't have any license or any car of my own.
ky-ómos dhén-in-áspro-úte.	And yet it isn't white either.
tóte dhé-tha-tdhate-vévea-ke-ta-aghálmata.	Then you surely couldn't have seen the statues either.

In sentences containing any one of the negative combinations (dhén or mín plus kanénas 'nobody', típota 'nothing', leftó 'not a penny', akóma 'not yet', álo 'no longer', poté 'never', puthená 'not anywhere; nowhere', kathólu 'not ... at all', míte ... míte 'neither ... nor', úte 'not ... either', ke ... 'not ... either') the normal order is: negative + verb + significant element of the negative combination.

Now consider the following examples:

kanénaz-dhen-áfine-to-fortáki-na-perási.	Nobody would let the Ford through.
akóma-dhen-dine-vríka.	I haven't found it yet.
poté-dhe-tha-ksekháso aftó-to-kalokéri.	Never will I forget that summer.
míte-víkha-iche-poté-tu míte-ponólemo.	He's never had a cough or a sore throat in his life. ('Neither cough has he ever had in his life, nor sore throat.')
ke-i-papadhópuli-vévea dhé-tha-sósune-to-éthnos.	The Papadopouloses, of course, will not save the country either.

These are instances of the reverse order (significant element + negative + verb), emphasizing the significant element. When míte ... míte stands in this stressed position, the negative (dhén or mín) does not appear.

(g) Adverbs. In this section we shall deal with adverbs and adverbial phrases which go with the verb.

The following are examples containing simple adverbs:

tha-vrúme-kápu-ena-spitáki.	We'll get a little house somewhere.
ma-thélo-tóte ekató-dhrakhmés ya-ghramatósima.	But then I'd need a hundred drachmas for stamps.
dhé-tha-vrí-éfkola-ándra.	She won't find a husband [very] easily.

ine-kápote-pyó-sklirt-i-zoí-s-tin-eládha ap-ot-ine-s-tin-amerikí?	Is life in Greece sometimes harder than it is in America?

Adverbs normally come immediately after the verb.

The following are examples containing adverbial phrases:

o-mikhális pézi-khartyá-me-tus-fílus-tu.	Michales plays cards with his friends.
échete-keró símera-to-vrádhi?	Do you have any time this evening?
orghóni-to-khoráfi-tu me-ta-vódhya-tu-kumbáru-tu.	He plows his field with the ox-team of his koumbaros.
dhem-bistévo-na-ne-klistés-i-trápezes tétya-óra?	I don't suppose the banks are closed at such an hour?

Adverbial phrases normally come at the end of a sentence. An adverb in this position (e.g. páne-s-tin-akrópoli-kavála "They're going up the Acropolis on horseback" or ma-se-ksékhase-aftós-tóra "But he's forgotten you by now.") is somewhat emphatic.

Now observe the following examples containing both adverbs and adverbial phrases:

tóra dhén-ine-dhinató.	[Right] now that's impossible.
khtés mu-éstil-ena-dhéma.	Yesterday he sent me a package.
káthe-mína mu-stélni-epitayí.	Every month he sends me a money order.
m-aftón-don-gerá ksekhortzi-kanénas tis-pyó-makrinés-vunokorfés.	In this weather you can distinguish the most distant mountain peaks.
edhó-ke-kámbosa-khrónya i-perisóteri-eyinítes zúsan-edhopáno.	Some years ago most Aeginetans used to live up here.
tóson-gerá-tóra se-théli.	For such a long time now he's been wanting you.
se-káthe-limáni vríski-kortítsya.	He finds a girl ('girls') in every port.
me-tim-bópi dhen-anígho-logharyazmó.	I don't [want to] start business dealings with Pope.

These are all instances of the reverse order, with the adverb or adverbial phrase put at the head of the sentence for emphasis or contrast.

(h) THE CONJUNCTIONS ómos AND lipón.

ky-ómos dhén-in-áspro-úte.	And yet it isn't white either.
kathos-ómos-aftí-anevénane-s-to-kástro	when they were coming up to the fortress, however
s-to-télos-ómos	at the end, however óli-lipón skotothíkane-s-tom-pólemo.	So they were all killed in the war.
k-étsi-lipón o-yánis-k-i-eléni káthonde-ke-periménune.	So for this reason John and Helen continue to wait.
lipón, ti-thélete-na-kámume?	Well, what'll ('what do you want that') we do?

The conjunction ómos 'however; yet' never comes at the beginning of a sentence; lipón 'well; then; so' sometimes occurs at the beginning, but usually does not.

2. You tell how you learned Greek through contact with the native speakers and with the help of a book called SPOKEN GREEK.

Section F — Telling About Things

Working alone, choose five topics from those given below and be prepared to tell the group about them when you meet. If you have a topic of your own that you can talk about, work on it instead of one of these. Telling a story, or telling how something is done, is a little different from carrying on a conversation, and a little practice in it is well worth while.

1. The soldier who was not afraid of war.
2. The man who advises a political candidate to make false promises to the people.
3. Beautiful Helen who never married because her older sister could not get a husband.
4. The farmer's boy who became a rich shipowner.
5. The peasant who avenged the honor of his sister.
6. An American who learned Greek on a small island.
7. The Maidens of the Erechtheum.
8. Cars and drivers in Greece.
9. Greek girls.
10. The way Greek boatmen race to catch a steamer.
11. A visit to a Greek hospital.
12. Farming.
13. Going to a museum.
14. Preelection days in Greece.
15. The many Greek dialects and the variations of the Greek language.
16. A visit to the Acropolis.
17. A trip to Aegina.
18. Greeks in America.
19. The characteristic features of the Greek landscape.
20. The geographical divisions of Greece.
21. The main Greek products and their centers of production.
22. The stages of Greek art.

2. IDIOM LIST

The following is a list of all idioms and idiomatic expressions which appear in this Manual. They are arranged alphabetically according to catchwords: these catchwords are verbs, provided, of course, that there is one in a given idiom. (The verb íme, however, only rarely appears as a catchword.) A verb entry shows the first (and if there is no first, the third) person singular of the imperfective present. Adverbs are listed, as far as possible, under the corresponding adjectives. Cross references will facilitate the location of a given idiom. Words that are not essential parts of an idiom, but rather depend on a given situation, are included in parentheses. A few explanatory remarks are included in brackets.

adherfós see: moré

aéras katharós-aéras "open air"

V. Verbs

Abbreviations: (C) consonant at end of stem
(V) vowel at end of stem

In the following lists the accent pattern of familiar singular imperatives ending in e applies to verbs whose stems are of (not less than) two syllables; where the stem of a verb consists of only one syllable, the accent in these forms is on the next to the last syllable. Where, in the following lists, stems of past-tense forms are presented as consisting of (not less than) two syllables, in cases of monosyllabic stems the accented vowel é has to be prefixed in order to make the stem dissyllabic.

4. GREEK–ENGLISH VOCABULARY

The following is a list of all words appearing in this Manual. They are arranged alphabetically according to the transcription used in the Aids to Listening. Idioms and idiomatic expressions are not listed in this Vocabulary, but form a separate part of the Appendix. All words in this Vocabulary that appear as catchwords in the Idiom List are marked with an asterisk. The following remarks will prove helpful.

(1) Verbs: verbs are listed in the first person singular of the imperfective present. This form is followed by the perfective stem between obliques. Of -o verbs, the perfective stem of the -me form is listed only if its derivation does not follow one of the six common patterns discussed on pages 418–419. All forms of a given verb that do not follow common patterns are listed, in parentheses, after the stem. Verbs whose imperfective present ends in stressed -ó follow the model ksipnó, unless the remark: (-t 3rd pers.) shows that they follow the model miló. In order to facilitate the finding of a verb, all perfective stems constitute entries by themselves (with reference, by means of a colon, to the imperfective present entry) if they do not follow the common patterns explained on pages 187–188 (for -o verbs) and 418–419 (for -me verbs). In looking up forms which begin with é- you must not forget that this sound is prefixed to many verbs in the past tense.

(2) Nouns, adjectives, adverbs: of nouns, plural formations are listed if they do not correspond to the patterns explained on pages 126–129 and 589–590. Nouns ending in -si follow the pattern presented on page 591, unless the plural (or, in a few cases in which there is no plural, the restrictive case) is added in parentheses. The feminine and neuter forms of adjectives are listed only if they do not correspond to the common patterns explained on pages 132 (for adjectives in -os) and 210–211 (for adjectives in -is). Limiting adjectives are, however, presented in all three genders. Adverbs are listed, as far as possible, under the corresponding adjectives.

(3) General: the explanations of place-names, given especially in the second part of the Finder List of Unit 25, have not been repeated in this Vocabulary. Don't forget that words beginning with b, d, g may sometimes be found under p, t, k respectively. Finally, always remember that kh and gh become ch and y respectively before e and i. The abbreviations used are the following: add. = case of address; dep. = dependent; f. = feminine; imp. = imperative; imperf. = imperfective; m. = masculine; n. = neuter; obj. = object case; p. = plural; part. = participle; perf. = perfective; pers. = person; pres. = present; rest. = restrictive case; s. = singular.

6. GRAMMATICAL INDEX

In this index the order of subentries under main entries corresponds, in general, to the order in which they have been treated in the Word Studies. Where pursuance of this principle would involve undue repetition of subentries, an alphabetical order has ordinarily been adopted. Under a few main entries, mostly those referring to major sections of the verb system, the first subentries follow an order particularly adapted to the topic in question. All numbers refer to pages.

Greek Text

I

Κλαδᾶς: Ἡ γυναῖκα μου θέλει λεφτὰ κάθε μέρα.
Ἀδαμαντίου: Καὶ τί κάνει μ' αὐτὰ τὰ λεφτά;
Κλαδᾶς: Δὲν ξέρω. Δὲν τῆς δίνω ποτέ.

II

Κοντός: Γιατί τρέχετε τόσο γλήγορα;
Μακρής: Δὲ θέλω νὰ σκοτωθοῦνε δυὸ ἄθρωποι.
Κοντός: Καὶ ποιοὶ εἶν' αὐτοί;
Μακρής: Ὁ ἕνας εἶν' ὁ ράφτης μου ποὺ ἔρχεται ἀπὸ πίσω μου.

III

Μαρία: Πιστεύω πὼς ὁ Πέτρος θέλει νὰ μὲ παντρευτῇ. Ὅταν ἤμουνα στὸ θέατρο τὴν ἄλλη φορὰ καθότανε καὶ μὲ κοίταζε ὅλη τὴν ὥρα.
Πόπη: Καθότανε ἀριστερά σας ἢ δεξιά σας;
Μαρία: Ὄχι, καθότανε στὴν καρέκλα ἀπὸ πίσω μου.

IV

Ὁ γιατρός: Ἔχει καλὸ κλίμα τὸ μέρος ποὺ μένατε ἴσα μὲ τώρα;
Γιάννης: Ὄχι καὶ τόσο καλό. Τὸν πρῶτο χρόνο ποὺ πῆγα ἐκεῖ πέρα δὲν μποροῦσα νὰ περπατήσω.
Ὁ γιατρός: Ἤσαστε ἄρρωστος;
Γιάννης: Ὄχι, δὲν ἤμουν ἀκόμα δυὸ χρονῶνε.

V

"Αὐτὸς ὁ φοιτητὴς πρέπει νά 'ναι φίλος σας," λέει κάποιος κύριος σ' ἕναν τσαγγάρη.
"Πῶς τὸ καταλάβατε;"
"Κάθε φορὰ ποὺ πηγαίνετε στὸ σπίτι του γιὰ τὸ λογαριασμὸ σᾶς λέει νὰ περάσετε τὴν ἄλλη μέρα γιατὶ θέλει νὰ σᾶς βλέπει κάθε μέρα."

VI

Ἡ κυρία Χριστοφόρου ρωτάει τὴ Μαρία: "Μαρία, ὁ ἄντρας μου γύρισε σπίτι πολὺ ἀργά. Τί ὥρα ἤτανε;"

Κ' ἡ Μαρία: "Δὲν ξέρω τί ὥρα ἤτανε, κυρία. Μὰ σήμερα τὸ πρωὶ τοὺ σηκώθηκα, εἶδα νὰ κουνιέται ἀκόμα τὸ κατέλο του στὴν πόρτα.

VII

Μήτσος: Μοῦ δίνετε χίλιες δραχμὲς τοὺ τὶς χρειάζομαι ἀμέσως;

Ὁ πλούσιος γείτονάς του: Μόνο χίλιες; Ἐγὼ θὰ σᾶς δώσω δέκα χιλιάδες ὅταν τελειώσῃ ὁ πόλεμος.

Μήτσος: Καὶ πότε θὰ τελειώσῃ ὁ πόλεμος;

Ὁ πλούσιος γείτονάς του: Καὶ ποιὸς τὸ ξέρει αὐτό;

VIII

Ὁ Ἀμερικανός: Θέλετε νὰ γίνετε γυναῖκα μου;

Τὸ κορίτσι: Ναί, θέλω. Μὰ πρέπει νὰ ρωτήσετε καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου. Τρεῖς ἄλλους τοὺ μὲ θέλανε τοὺς ἔρριξε ἔξω ἀπ' τὸ παράθυρο.

Ὁ Ἀμερικανός: Πάω νὰ τόνε ρωτήσω κ' ἐγώ. Μὰ δὲ μοῦ λέτε, σὲ ποιὸ πάτωμα μένετε;

Translation of the Anecdotes

I

Kladas: My wife wants money every day.
Adamantiou: What does she do with that money?
Kladas: I don't know. I never give her any.

II

Kontos: Why are you running so fast?
Makres: I don't want two men to be killed.
Kontos: Who are they?
Makres: One's my tailor who's coming after me.

III

Mary: I think Peter wants to marry me. When I was at the theater the last time, he sat and looked at me the whole time.
Pope: Did he sit on your left or on your right?
Mary: No, he sat in the seat back of me.

IV

The doctor: Does the place you've lived in up till now have a good climate?

John: Not so very good. The first year I moved there I couldn't do any walking.

The doctor: Were you sick?

John: No, I wasn't two years old yet.

"That student must be a friend of yours," some man said to a shoemaker.

"How do you figure that?"

"Every time you go to his house to collect your bill he tells you to stop in the next day, because he wants to see you every day."

VI

Mrs. Christophorou asks Mary: "Mary, my husband came home very late. What time was it?"

And Mary replies: "I don't know what time it was, ma'am. But this morning when I got up, I saw his hat still swinging by the door."

VII

Metsos: Can you give me a thousand drachmas? I need them right away.

His rich neighbor: Only a thousand? I'll give you ten thousand when the war's over.

Metsos: But when will the war be over?

His rich neighbor: Who knows that?

VIII

The American: Do you want to be my wife?

The girl: Yes, I do. But you'll have to ask my father. Three others who wanted me he threw out the window.

The American: I'll go and ask him. But say, what floor do you live on?

SECTION A: An Episode of the Greek War of Independence.

Greek Text

Ἡ Ἑλλάδα μιὰ φορὰ ἤτανε πολὺ πιὸ μεγάλη ἀπ' ὅ,τι εἶναι τώρα. Ὅλος ὁ κόσμος τήρε φοβώτανε. Μὰ ἐδῶ καὶ πεντακόσια χρόνια οἱ Τοῦρκοι νικήσανε τοὺς Ἕλληνες καὶ πήρανε τὴ Σαλονίκη, τὴν Ἀθήνα, τὴν Πάτρα καὶ πολλὲς ἄλλες πόλεις. Πολλοὶ Ἕλληνες τότε φύγανε καὶ πήγανε ἀλλοῦ — ἄλλοι μείνανε καὶ κάνανε ὅ,τι τοὺς λέγανε οἱ Τοῦρκοι. Μὰ ἤτανε καὶ κάτι ... προτιμούσανε νὰ ζοῦνε μακρειὰ ἀπ' τὶς γυναῖκες τους καὶ μακρειὰ ἀπ' τὰ παιδιά τους παρὰ μαζί τους καὶ μαζὶ μὲ τοὺς Τούρκους. Φεύγανε ἀπ' τὶς πόλεις ἀπ' τὰ χωριὰ καὶ πηγαίνανε κάτω στὸ γιαλὸ ἢ πάνω στὰ βουνά. Τὴ νύχτα πολεμούσανε μὲ τοὺς Τούρκους: ἕνας Ρωμιὸς μὲ δέκα Τούρκους, μιὰ μικρὴ βάρκα μὲ δέκα μεγάλα καράβια. Τέτοιου εἴδους Ἕλληνας ἦτανε κι ὁ Κανάρης. Ὁ Κανάρης γεννήθηκε σὲ μιὰ μικρὴ πόλι κοντὰ στὴ θάλασσα. Τοῦ ἄρεσε ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ ναύτη, ἀγαποῦσε τὴ θάλασσα καὶ τὰ ταξίδια. Μὰ πιὸ πολὺ ἀπ' τὴ θάλασσα κι ἀπ' τὰ ταξίδια ἀγαποῦσε τὴν πατρίδα του, τὴν Ἑλλάδα. Ὅταν ἔγινε πλοίαρχος ἦτανε μόλις εἴκοσι χρονῶν. Ἐκεῖνα τὰ χρόνια οἱ Ἕλληνες εἴχανε πόλεμο μὲ τοὺς Τούρκους. Μιὰ μέρα οἱ Τοῦρκοι ἤρθανε μ' ἕνα σωρὸ καράβια σὲ μιὰ ἀπ' τὶς ὡραιότερες πόλεις τῆς Ἑλλάδας. Σκοτώσανε ὅλους τοὺς ἄντρες ποὺ ἦτανε σ' αὐτὴν τὴν πόλι καὶ πιάσανε τὶς γυναῖκες καὶ τὰ παιδιά. Τὰ παιδιὰ θὰ γινόντανε Τοῦρκοι κι αὐτά, δὲ θὰ μιλοῦσαν ἄλλο ἑλληνικά, θὰ ξεχνούσανε τὴν πατρίδα τους καὶ θὰ πολεμούσανε τοὺς Ἕλληνες. Ἀπ' τὶς γυναῖκες σκοτώσαν οἱ Τοῦρκοι πολλές, μὰ ὅσες ἦταν ὡραῖες καὶ δυνατὲς τὶς ἀνεβάσανε πάνω στὰ καράβια τους γιὰ νὰ τὶς πουλήσουνε σὲ κανέναν πλούσιο Τοῦρκο. Ὅ,τι λεφτὰ βρήκανε τὰ πήρανε μαζί τους. Δὲν ἔμεινε σπίτι στὴν πόλι γιατὶ τὰ κάψανε ὅλα οἱ Τοῦρκοι. Ὅταν τὸ ἔμαθε ὁ Κανάρης πῆρε πέντ' ἕξι ἄντρες. Πῆγε μαζί τους πρῶτα στὴν ἐκκλησιὰ τοῦ χωριοῦ. Ὕστερα ἀποχαιρέτισε τοὺς φίλους του, μπῆκε σὲ μιὰ βάρκα καὶ ἔφυγε μὲ τὴ βοήθεια τοῦ Θεοῦ. Ὅτα φτάσανε ἐκεῖ ποὺ εἶχανε τὰ καράβια τους οἱ Τοῦρκοι, δὲ φοβηθήκανε. Μὰ πήγανε κοντὰ στὸ μεγαλύτερο καὶ τὸ καλύτερο καράβι καὶ βάλανε φωτιά. Ὅσοι Τοῦρκοι ἦτανε σ' αὐτὸ καήκανε ἢ πνιγήκανε. Ὁ Κανάρης ἔφυγε ὅταν εἶδε πὼς ἄναψε καλὰ τὸ καράβι. Κανένας ἀπ' τοὺς ἄντρες του δὲ σκοτώθηκε.

Translation of the Episode

Greece was once much greater than she is now. The whole world feared her. But five hundred years ago the Turks conquered the Greeks and captured Salonica, Athens, Patras, and many other cities. Many Greeks left at that time and went elsewhere; many stayed and did whatever the Turks told them. But there were some who preferred to live far from their wives and far from their children rather than with them and with the Turks. They left the towns and villages and went down to the coast or up into the mountains. At night they would fight with the Turks: one Greek with ten Turks, one small boat with ten big ships. That is the kind of Greek Kanares was. Kanares was born in a small town near the sea. He liked a sailor's life, and he loved the sea and voyages. But more than the sea and voyages he loved his country, Greece. When he became a captain, he was scarcely twenty. In those years the Greeks were at war with the Turks. One day the Turks came with a host of ships to one of the most beautiful cities in Greece. They killed all the men that were in that city, and seized the women and children. The children would grow up as Turks, would not speak Greek any more, would forget their country and fight the Greeks. Of the women the Turks killed many, but all who were beautiful and strong they put on board their vessels, to sell them to some wealthy Turk. Whatever money they found they took with them. Not a house remained in the city, for the Turks burned them all. When Kanares learned of it, he took five or six men. First he went with them to the village church. Then he said good-bye to his friends, got into a boat, and left with God's help. When they reached the place where the Turks had their vessels, they did not become frightened, but went close to the largest and finest ship and threw fire. All the Turks who were aboard her were burned or drowned. Kanares left when he saw that the ship had caught fire nicely. Not one of his men was killed.

Translation of the Questions

1. How many years ago did the Turks conquer the Greeks?
2. What did the Greeks do when they were conquered by the Turks?
3. What kind of Greek was Kanares?
4. How old was he when he became a captain?
5. Were the Greeks at war with the Turks while Kanares was living?
6. What did the Turks do with the men whenever they captured any city?
7. What did they do with the women?
8. What did they do with the children?
9. What did Kanares do when he learned what the Turks had done?
10. What were ships made of in Kanares's time?

Greek Text

Ἐγώ, παιδί μου, εἶμαι ἀπ' τὴν Κεφαλονιά. Ὁ πατέρας μου ἤτανε φτωχός. Δὲν εἶχε χτῆμα δικό του μὰ πήγαινε καὶ δούλευε σὲ ξένα χτήματα. Δούλευε ὅσο μποροῦσε. Καὶ ἡ καημένη ἡ μητέρα μου δούλευε νύχτα μέρη. Ἔσκαβε τὴ γῆ, τρυγοῦσε τὴ σταφίδα, μάζωνε ἐλιὲς καὶ πήγαινε καμιὰ φορὰ καὶ δούλευε σὲ σπίτι. Ἤτανε μαύρη ἀπὸ τὸν ἥλιο καὶ πετσὶ καὶ κόκκαλο ἀπὸ τὴ δουλειά, μὰ γερή. Δὲ θυμοῦμαι ν' ἀρρώστησε ποτέ της. Καὶ μ' ὅλη τὴ δουλειὰ δὲν τῆς λείπανε καὶ τὰ παιδιά. Ἤμαστε ἕξι ἀγόρια, ἕξι τοῦ Θεοῦ, καθὼς λέμε στὴν Κεφαλονιά, καὶ δύο κορίτσια. Γι' αὐτὸ καὶ τὴν ἀγαποῦσε ὁ πατέρας μου καὶ τὴν ἄφηνε νὰ κάνῃ ὅ,τι θέλῃ. Ἐγὼ ἤμουνα ὁ μεγαλύτερος. Βοηθοῦσα τὸν πατέρα μου στὶς δουλειές του. Δούλευα τὴν κυριακὴ σὲ καφενεῖο καὶ τὸ χειμῶνα σὲ κανένα μπακάλικο, κ' ἔβγαινα κ' ἐγὼ λεφτά. Ὅ,τι ἔβγαινα τὸ ἔδινα τῆς μητέρας μου.

Ὅταν ἔγινα δώδεκα χρονῶνε, πέθανε ὁ πατέρας μου. Μπορεῖς νὰ φανταστῇς σὲ τί θέσι βρέθηκε τότε ἡ μάννα μου, μὲ ὀχτὼ μικρὰ παιδιὰ καὶ χωρὶς καμιὰ βοήθεια. Δυὸ τρία χρόνια πρὶν ἕνας ἀδερφὸς τῆς μητέρας μου μπόρεσε νὰ πάῃ στὴν Ἀμερική. Ἐκεῖνα τὰ χρόνια δὲν ἤτανε τόσο δύσκολο ὅσο εἶναι τώρα. Ἡ μητέρα μου σκέφτηκε νὰ γράψῃ τοῦ ἀδερφοῦ της. Τόνε παρακάλεσε νὰ πάρῃ ἐμένα καὶ τὸν Πέτρο σπίτι του. Τὰ δυὸ κορίτσια τὰ ἔβαλε καὶ δουλεύανε σὲ σπίτι. Τὸ Σπύρο τόνε πῆρε ὁ κουμπάρος μας ὁ Κλαδᾶς στὸ χτῆμα του. Κ' ἔτσι ἔμεινε ἡ μάννα μου μὲ τὰ τρία ἄλλα ἀγόρια. Γιὰ νὰ μπορέσῃ νὰ μᾶς στείλῃ στὴν Ἀμερικὴ ἡ μανούλα μου πούλησε τὸ κρεββάτι της, τὰ δαχτυλίδια της καὶ ὅ,τι ἄλλο εἶχε. Ὅταν ὅλα ἦταν ἕτοιμα, μᾶς φίλησε ἡ μάννα μου καὶ εἶπε: "Πήγαινε στὸ καλό, Κώστα μου, κ' ἐσύ, χρυσέ μου Πετράκι. Κι ὅταν πᾶτε στὴν Ἀμερική, μὴν ξεχάσετε τὶς ἀδερφές σας. Καὶ στεῖλετέ τους λεφτὰ νὰ παντρευτοῦνε κ' ἐκεῖνες μὲ τὸ καλὸ καὶ νὰ βροῦνε ἄντρα ποὺ τοὺς ἀξίζει."

Πήγαμε πρίτη θέσι καὶ κοιμηθήκαμε καμιὰ εἰκοσαριὰ ἄθρωποι σὲ μιὰ καμπίνα. Ποτὲ δὲ θὰ ξεχάσω τὸ βράδυ ποὺ φτάσαμε στὴ Νέα Ὑόρκη καὶ εἶδα γιὰ πρώτη φορὰ τὸ Ἄγαλμα τῆς Λευτεριᾶς. Ὁ θεῖος μας μᾶς πῆγε στὴν κάμαρά του ὅπου κοιμώτανε μὲ πέντ' ἕξι ἄλλους Ρωμιούς. Τὴν ἄλλη μέρα ἀρχίσαμε τὴ δουλειά. Πλέναμε ποτήρια, φλιτζάνια, μαχαίρια καὶ πιρούνια σ' ἕνα μεγάλο ἐστιατόριο κοντὰ στὸ λιμάνι. Ὅ,τι λεφτὰ βγάναμε τὰ στέλναμε στὴ μητέρα μου.

Ὕστερ' ἀπὸ λίγα χρόνια ὁ θεῖος μου ἄνοιξε δικό του ἐστιατόριο. Μᾶς εἶχε καὶ τόνε βοηθούσαμε, κι ὅταν ἐκεῖνος πέθανε μᾶς ἄφησε ὅ,τι κι ἂν εἶχε.

Παντρέψαμε τις δυὸ ἀδερφὲς μας. Μὲ τὰ λεφτά μας μπορέσανε νὰ σπουδάσουνε οἱ δυὸ μικρότεροι ἀδερφοί μου. Ὁ Γιάννης σπούδασε δικηγόρος κι ὁ Γιώργος γιατρός.

Τὴν ἄνοιξι τοῦ τριάντα δύο ὕστερ' ἀπὸ τριάντα χρόνια γύρισα πάλι στὴν Κεφαλονιά. Σὰ μὲ εἶδε ἡ μάννα μου, χάρηκε πολύ. Ὕστερ' ἀπὸ κάνα δυὸ μῆνες μοῦ λέει μιὰ μέρα ἡ μητέρα μου: "Μιὰ χάρι νὰ μοῦ κάμῃς, Κώστα μου, πρὶν πεθάνω." "Λέγε," τῆς εἶπα τότ' ἐγώ. "Νὰ παντρευτῇς, παιδί μου, νὰ πάρῃς κορίτσι ἀπ' τὴν Κεφαλονιά." Τῆς ἔκαμα κι αὐτὴν τὴ χάρι.

Ὕστερ' ἀπὸ λίγο καιρὸ πέθανε ἡ καημένη ἡ μητέρα μου. Ἡ γυναῖκα μου ἤρθε μαζί μου στὴν Ἀμερική. Ἀγόρασα μαζὶ μὲ τὸν Πέτρο ἕνα ξενοδοχεῖο κι ἄνοιξα ἕνα μεγάλο ἐστιατόριο κοντὰ στὴ Fifth Avenue. Οἱ δουλειές μας πάνε καλά, δόξα σοι ὁ Θεός. Ἔχω δυὸ παιδιά. Ἕλα καμιὰ μέρα σπίτι μου νὰ τὰ δῇς. Τὸ γιό μου τόνε λένε Τζέρυ (Jerry)· τὸ κορετσάκι μου τὸ λένε Φρόσω σὰν τὴ μητέρα μου.

Translation of the Story

My friend, I'm from Cephalonia. My father was poor. He didn't have a farm of his own, but went and worked on other people's estates. He worked as hard as he could. And my poor mother worked night and day. She dug up the ground, picked currants, gathered olives, and sometimes went out and did housework. She was browned by the sun, and nothing but skin and bones from working so, but she was husky. I don't remember that she was ever sick a day in her life. And with all that work she had no lack of children either. There were six of us boys, six from God, as we say in Cephalonia, and two girls. For this my father loved her in return, and allowed her to do whatever she wanted. I was the oldest. I used to help my father at his work. I worked Sundays in a coffee-house, and in winter at some grocery store, and I, too, earned money. Whatever I made I used to give to my mother.

When I reached the age of twelve, my father died. You can imagine what a situation my mother was in then, with eight small children and no help. Two or three years before, one of my mother's brothers had been able to go to America. In those years it wasn't as hard as it is now. It occurred to my mother to write to her brother. She begged him to take Peter and me in with him. The two girls she put at domestic service. As for Spyros, our godfather Kladas took him on the farm. In this way my mother was left with the three other boys. In order to be able to send us to America my dear mother sold her bed, her rings, and whatever else she had. When everything was ready, my mother kissed us and said, "Good-bye, Kostas, my boy, and Peter, dear. And when you go to America, don't forget your sisters. Send them money so that they can get married if all goes well, and can find husbands worthy of them."

We went third class and slept some twenty men to a cabin. I'll never forget the evening we got to New York and I saw the Statue of Liberty for the first time. My uncle took us to his room, where he slept with five or six other Greeks. The next day we started work. We washed glasses, cups, knives and forks in a big restaurant near the waterfront. Whatever money we made we sent to my mother.

A few years later my uncle opened a restaurant of his own. He had us help him, and when he died he left whatever he had to us. We married off our two sisters. With our money my two youngest brothers were able to study. John studied law, and George medicine.

In the spring of '32, after thirty years, I went back to Cephalonia. When my mother saw me, she was very glad. A month or two later my mother said to me one day, "Do me one favor, won't you, Kostas, before I die." "What is it?" I asked her. "Get married, my boy, find a girl from Cephalonia." Well, I did her that favor.

A short while afterwards my poor mother died. My wife came with me to America. In partnership with Peter I bought a hotel and opened a large restaurant near Fifth Avenue. Our business is going fine, I'm glad to say. I have two children. Come over to my house some time and see them. My son's name is Jerry; my little girl's called Phroso after my mother.
